Another original Broadway cast album dropout this past week was "The Boast In Me." The musical, an adaptation of James Thurber's fables with music by Don Elliott and lyrics by James Costigan, closed Saturday (18 after four performances. Columbia Records had the original Broadway cast album rights and a $20,000 investment in the show.

RCA Suit Asks Injunction Vs. Premier, Coronet To Halt TD Disk Distrib

Radio Corp. of America filed suit in N.Y. Supreme Court last week against Premier Albums and Coronet Records seeking an injunction to enjoin distribution of a recording using the name of the late Tommy Dorsey or his orchestra. Justice George M. Carney, however, denied RCA's motion for a preliminary injunction which the plaintiff is appealing.

The defendants made a general denial of all allegations and asked dismissal of the suit. In defense, they claim that under a November 21, 1962 agreement with Jane Dorsey and State Amusement Corp., they purchased certain masters and right to record. They claimed they entered the agreement in good faith without having knowledge of RCA's rights.

The defense further claims that by allowing 20th-Fox Records to record two albums of the late Dorsey and by failing to notify either Jane Dorsey or State Amusement to stop the recording of the Dorsey music between 1935 and 1956, and by permitting them to retain unreleased TD records, RCA permitted to be invested in State Amusement ownership of the masters which Premier bought from State Amusement and Jane Dorsey and are stopped from bringing action.

George Avakian To Manage Orch U.S.A.

George Avakian is back on the music business scene as manager of the recently-formed Orchestra U.S.A. The orch, under the musical direction of John Lewis, consists of 20 musicians, both classical and jazz.

Avakian, who has a non-exclusive independent producing agreement with RCA Victor, recently expanded into music publishing and has begun producing masters for release by another label.

Ormandy Wielding Baton at Conf'l Concerts

Philadelphia, May 21.

With the window of the Philadelphia Orchestra season, conductor Eugene Ormandy is flying to Europe for seven dates, the first of which will be with the Danish Radio Orchestra, Copenhagen, Thursday (23).

The trip marks Ormandy's first guest conducting in Europe since 1957. He was scheduled to make a number of appearances in 1961, but the trip was cancelled because of injuries the maestro suffered in an auto accident.

His other conducting dates overseas include the London Philharmonic, May 27; the Nord Deutsche Rundfunk, Hamburg, June 6; the Vienna Philharmonic, June 9; a second London Philharmonic concert, June 14; the Tonnehalle Orchestra, Zurich, June 18; and the Residentie Orchestra, Scheveningen, Holland, June 22.

RIAA Reelects Most Officers At Annual Meeting

Most of the officers of the Record Industry Assn. of America were reelected to serve another term at the organization's annual meeting in New York last week.

Holding on to their posts are Glenn E. Wallichs, chairman of the board of Capitol Records, as RIAA president; Dave Kapp, head of Kapp Records, as first vice president; Sam Clark, president of ABC-Paramount, veepee; James Johnson, of Disneyland, veepee; and Ira Moss, of Ambassador Records, veepee. Newly elected veepee is Russ Rubin, head of Monitor Records. She replaces Jac Holzman, head of Elektra Records.

John Stevenson, head of the Children's Record Guild, holds as RIAA treasurer; and Henry Brief remains exec secretary. Counsel for the RIAA is Ernest S. Meyers.

The term of office for the 1963 slate will run until the third Tuesday in January when the RIAA will hold its annual meet. A recent regulation switched the election time from May to January.

At the meet, the RIAA board of directors created an associate membership classification for manufacturers of phonographs and sound reproducing equipment. The aim is to build a closer liaison between the record producers and the equipment manufacturers.

'DON'T L BENEFIT FOR PIANIST BILLY ECKSTEIN

Montreal, May 21.

A benefit is being held Monday (27) in Her Majesty's Theatre, here for Billy Eckstein, onetime "boy Paderewski" who toured the U.S. and played the White House golden piano for President Teddy Roosevelt.

He'll be 75 come Dec 8 and until a couple of years ago still played ricky-tick piano in Montreal nightspots. American Guild of Variety Artists members reportedly have permission to appear cuffo at the benefit.

Eckstein played Broadway at 14, billed above Elsie Janis (and later above fellow Canadian Eva Tanguay) and was reviewed in one of Variety's earliest issues. He played for Beatrice Lillie's first stage appearance and for 20 years accompanied silent films at the Montreal Strand.

Eckstein, also a composer, collaborated with Gene Buck on a 1910 Ziegfeld Follies tune, "Goodbye Sunshine, Hello Moon," and later with Mitchell Parish on "Take My Heart."

CLIFF RICHARD NEXT IN LINE

By MIKE GROSS

The British invasion of U.S. show biz is spreading into the record field. According to tradesters it's beginning to shape up like a repeat of the beachhead established by the Britishers in the Broadway legit area this past season.

Spearheading the new British assault on the U.S. disk market is Cliff Richard, Great Britain's top disher, who, last week was signed to an exclusive pact by Epic Records for the U.S. release of any of his British recordings as well as any records he makes in this country.

Richard is not the first of the Britishers to shoot for a foothold on the American disk scene but he is probably the first to arrive with so much spinning ammunition. His world-wide record sales are reported to be greater than any other United Kingdom artist. The 22-year-old singer already has been awarded two gold disks for sales exceeding 1,000,000 copies of two singles and 14 silver disks for sales exceeding 250,000 copies of singles.

The 'British Sound'

In the past several years the U.S. disk market has opened up to the "British sound" via the recordings of Vera Lynn, Ted Heath, Mantovani, Lonnie Donegan, Laurie London and, more recently, Acker Bilk, Kenny Ball and Shirley Bassey.

The original Broadway cast album field is currently getting its licks in, too, with the packages of "Oliver" and "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off" and "Beyond the Fringe." All have British casts.

In addition to the projected U.S. push on Richard, Epic is planning another drive on Helen Shapiro, and London Records is working on a buildup of Georgia Brown. Latter, who is in the Broadway cast of "Oliver," already has two albums released by London Records this year.

Epic is planning to continue its drive on Miss Shapiro even though her first release here late last year was disappointing on the sales end. For her next time out, Epic will release her first U.S.-made recordings. She had a series of recording sessions in Nashville under supervision of American artists & repertoire director Al Kasha, and Norrie Paramor, her own British conductor and general musical director.

Epic also has a big push going on Rolf Harris, an Australian

Mathis to Merc After Exiting Col

Johnny Mathis has settled for Mercury Records as his new record company affiliation when his pact with Columbia Records winds up in early July. The singer and his manager, Helen Noga, had been shopping around for some time now and several disk companies were pitching for the Mathis deal.

Foremost among the dishories in the competition was Warner Bros. Records. Up until the Merc announcement came through, WB thought it had Mathis in the bag. Contracts had already been drawn, all basic issues had ostensibly been settled, when Mike Maitland, WB president, "severed all contract negotiations when it was learned that other recording companies were being solicited."

Mathis regarded his last sessions for Columbia in New York last week. It's expected that from now on he'll produce his own dates and Merc will distribute them. For this disk-producing venture, Mathis has set up Global Records which will own the masters.

An unusual aspect of the Mathis tie with Mercury is that the dishery is in the Columbia Record Club with its top product. So, Mathis may not be completely through with Col after all.

Col Racks Up 13 Out of 39 Grammy Awards, Victor Takes 7, Cap Gets 5

With Tony Bennett and Vladimir Horowitz pacing the field in their respective pop and classical categories, Columbia Records romped in with 13 of the 39 Grammy awards at the fifth annual competition sponsored by the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences (NARAS) last Wednesday (15). RCA Victor pulled up with seven and Capitol took home five.

The comedy honors went to Vaughn Meader, of course, whose "The First Family" album on Cadence set a sales peak of more than 4,500,000 copies. The package was voted "Best Album of The Year" and Meader was named for "Best Comedy Performance."

Even though NARAS is continually searching for remedies to straighten out the category separation and the voting methods, this year's awards still spotlighted some odd hits. For example: Robert Goulet copped the "Best New Artist of 1962" honor but there was no record award to substantiate that accolade. In fact Goulet didn't even have a disk nomination among the 240 platters in the competition.

Also, "What Kind of Fool Am I," the Leslie Bricusse-Anthony Newley showtune from "Stop The World—I Want To Get Off," was voted "Song of The Year" but had no disk award to go along with it although it did garner several performance nominations. Moreover, Burl Ives' "Funny Way of Laughin'" was named "Best Country & Western" disk but the Decca execs consider it a pop record.

However, NARAS' track record on the Grammy affair is one of steady improvement and it's expected that by the time next year's voting rolls around, more gremlins will have been eliminated.

As far as Columbia's pacemakers go Bennett scored with "Record of The Year" and "Best Male Solo Performance" for "I Left My Heart In San Francisco." The tune also won a "Best Background Arrangement" award for Marty Manning. Horowitz nabbed "Best Classical Album of Year" and "Best Classical Instrumental Soloist or Duo" Grammys for "Columbia Records Presents Vladimir Horowitz." It was the pianist's first release for Col since switching from Victor.

In last year's Grammy competition, RCA Victor paced the field with 13 awards. Capitol followed with 10 and Columbia came up with 8.

Merv Griffin emceed the New York affair which was held at the

Minneapolis, May 21.

The Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra is seeking to raise $300,000 to cover the past season's deficit. And, as customary, nearly all of it will come from individual donations. The amount is about the same as usual.

Such special events as an annual ball contribute to the orchestra financial fund. It costs $60 per couple to attend these balls. Per usual, success crowned last week's ball.

The symphony played waltzes the first hour to give guests an idea of what it's like to step to that part of voluminous music. After the first 60 minutes, a Meyer Davis orchestra took over for the dancing.

The ball drew 1,500 payees at $30 each for an estimated $30,000 gross. Net profit will go to the orchestra fund.

Harry Fox Files Novel Suit Over Unlicensed Disks

A novel action involving the sale of unlicensed records of copyrighted musical compositions through the medium of radio stations and a telephone service is now in the courts. The complaint was filed yesterday (Tues) in N.Y. Federal Court for Harry Fox, publishers' agent and trustee, by attorney Julian T. Abeles.

The defendants are Mark-Fi Records Inc., the alleged manufacturer; Tony Alamo, under whose direction it is alleged its acts were perpetrated; Metlis & Lebow Corp., the ad agency who, it's claimed, arranged for such exploitation; Stanley Lebow and Monte Bruce, under whose direction its acts were committed; WMCA (N.Y. station) and Westinghouse Broadcasting Corp., over whose stations it's charged such records were advertised.

It is understood that the telephone service will be joined as a party defendant, after its name is ascertained through an examination of the advertising agency.

The plaintiffs are Columbia Pictures-Screen Gems Music, Travis Music, Sea-Lark Enterprises and Figure Music.

Purpose of suit is to establish a legal precedent, by obtaining an adjudication of the liability to the copyright proprietors of all who participate or are concerned in such activities, and to thereby discourage the future exploitation of unlicensed recordings through such channels.

COL ADDS TOM WILSON TO ITS POP A&R DEPT.

Tom Wilson has been added to Columbia Records' pop artists & repertoire department. One of Wilson's first assignments will be to act as producer for the recordings made at New York's new gospel nightclub, "The Sweet Chariot."

Most of Wilson's activities will be concentrated on the production of jazz, folk and gospel products. He'll also work in the development of new artists in these areas.

Wilson has been working in the jazz, folk and gospel field since 1954. At Transition Records, which he founded, he discovered and recorded Odetta, Cecil Taylor and Curtis Fuller; he also waxed such artists as John Coltrane and Cannonball Adderley.

He has been a producer for United Artists, Savoy Records and, most recently, Audio Fidelity where he created its subsid Dauntless label.

Lorna Music's Paramor Gets 24 LPs, 350 Tunes Of Late Charlie Parker

London, May 21.

Lorna Music topper Alan Paramor, who is also mentor to singer Helen Shapiro, is sorting the first consignment of about two dozen albums and 350 music copyrights belonging to the late Charlie Parker's disk and publishing companies. After a year of litigation in the U.S. courts they have finally been freed to him for use in the U.K. and the rest of the world outside America and Canada.

Paramor handled the music copyright deal directly with Aubrey Mathew and Parker's widow Doris. The albums have come to him via MGM Records. The albums—which include "The Connection" show LP and disks by Alan Williams and Barry Miles—were originally controlled by the Vogue label here but they have not yet been issued outside North America.

Paramor expects EMI—which handles the MGM label in the U.K.—to be issuing the first of these tracks within the next two or three months. The 350 music copyrights brought together under the banner of Charlie Parker Music Co. include about half what the jazz man wrote himself.

Nelson's 'Sweet Love,' Faith's 'Lovers,' Dick & Dee Dee's 'Love' Top New LPs

RICK NELSON: "FOR YOUR SWEET LOVE" (Decca). Rick Nelson opens his LP career for Decca with a bang. The package is a potpourri of the various melodic moods currently holding forth in the pop market and he handles 'em with a savvy of the youthful tastes and desires. He's a versatile vocalist as evidenced by the zingy treatment given "Gypsy Woman" and the authentic blues feel presented in "I Got A Woman." The other items are varied in mood but come over with similar impact. All sides are good programming bets, and the package is sure to run at a hot sales pace.

PERCY FAITH ORCH: "THEMES FOR YOUNG LOVERS" (Columbia). The tunes culled for this package have already made a good score on the pop single circuit but they all take on a new dimension in Percy Faith's handling. He gives an importance that most of them didn't have in their original showcasing by adding some rich melodic sound. If one of the youthful sort is taken away from the tunes in this sort of presentation and, in fact, it makes them sound like songs that can make it over the long pull and even attract adult appreciation. The kids will remember "I Will Follow You," "Up On The Roof," "The End Of The World," "On Broadway," among others, and it will be a new and rewarding experience for the older folks.

DICK & DEE DEE: "YOUNG AND IN LOVE" (Warner Bros.). A bright young vocal duo, Dick (St. John) & Dee Dee (Sperling) have hit the disk market successfully via the singles market and, with this outing, go after the LP crowd as well. From the sound of this session, the twosome seems likely to repeat their previous success. They have developed a nice and effective rock style that is not just belting but has some more subtle values as well. The duo's style has elements of rhythm 'n' blues, religious and straight rock, all blended with a touch of straight pop styling for a can't miss presentation. Their material is as varied as their style and this LP effectively showcases their versatility in grooves that should grab a good piece of the current pop disk action.

"MONDO CANE" (United Artists). Just as the moods and themes of the film "Mondo Cane" are vastly assorted, so is the musical score composed by Riz Ortolani and Nino Oliviero for the pic. There are samplings of many musical forms included on this track, each one suited for a different segment of the many-localed documentary. Moods range from somber to gay and the music likewise reflects these changes in everything from haunting and pieces to swinging jazz. Each musical seg gets a spot of its own and the result is a fine showcase for the varied talents of the composers. Those who have seen the film will doubtless be effected by its impact and this disking could well catch on. At least one cut has already taken hold, "More."

VALENTINE PRINGLE: "I HEAR AMERICA SINGING" (RCA Victor). Valentine Pringle, a Harry Belafonte discovery, impresses as a singer with unusual power and sensitivity. In this debut set, he concentrates on folk and spiritual material, delivering each song with a deep feeling that communicates. If Pringle would unbend just a little, he would even more effectively. In this set, he is outstanding on "5000 Miles From Home," "Didn't It Rain," "Battle Hymn," "Red Rosey Bush" and "Goin' Down That Road."

"CRAZY FINGERS" MOE & HIS RAGTIMERS: "OLD SONGS ARE GOOD SONGS PLAYED ON HONKY-TONK PIANO" (RCA Camden). As the title indicates, this is a set of honky-tonk piano items, played with appropriate fancy by "Crazy Fingers" Moe & His Ragtimers. Fans of this musical groove will be well pleased by the LP for the group's playing is slick and spirited in its idiom and the tune selection will give the folks cause to sing along and maybe even do some terping should the mood strike. There's lotsa fun here for diggers of this groove as the group essays the likes of "12th Street Rag," "After the Ball," "In the Good Old Summertime," "A Bird In The Gilded Cage," "You're a Grand Old Flag" and others.

VICTOR FELDMAN ALL-STARS "SOVIET JAZZ THEMES" (Ava). This is a fascinating exploration into the big mind behind the Iron Curtain. In this offering, Victor Feldman's combo dishes up a collection of ideas that are circulating in Soviet jazz cellars. Much of this material sounds like it was invented in Russia by way of American inspiration, but that is only the reflection of the fact that in jazz, there's only one world. It would have been more interesting to hear how the Soviet musicians handle these themes, but this combo turns them into hard-driving, tightly knit conceptions.

"CHILDREN RUNS AROUND THE TREE" (Decca). This is a collection of original kiddie ditties by Helen Horn, a Connecticut kindergarten teacher and columnist-radio-tv commentator on children's activities. As the title suggests, the material covers activities pegged to various times of the year like Thanksgiving, Christmas, birthday, summertime and other occasions. Sung by Rosemarie Jun and Robert Spiro, the tunes come across very effectively and the LP emerges as a pleasant and entertaining kidisk. The melodies are light and simple and the lyrics are fun and instructional. It all adds up to an effective session both from the education and entertainment points of view.

LUIZ BONFA (Philips). Perhaps best known to Yank audiences for his "Black Orfeus" title song, Luiz Bonfa has also become known to bossa nova buffs in the past year. A skillful guitarist and able vocalist, Bonfa here exhibits his skills in both categories as he essays a collection of bossa tunes in smooth and authentic style. His guitaring has a restrained drive and rhythmic pulsation sure to delight bossa buffs and his singing has a quiet emotion that sells the tunes with latin charm. The tunes move nicely under his command and this session should do well in the bossa market place.

DIAN & THE GREENBRIAR BOYS (Elektra). The spirited and authentic bluegrass sound of the Greenbrier Boys gets an added dimension for this outing with the addition of femme country singer Dian to their ranks. For the session they demonstrate their country stylings in a variety of moods, on all occasions turning in an exciting and skillful performance which pleases folk and country buffs and the more discriminating others with equal effectiveness. The expanded unit displays strong drive on the speedier numbers and a nice emotional quality on the slower tunes. Throughout there runs an understanding of the material and feeling for its message that makes for a consistently entertaining and hip session. Dian delivers with skill and zest and the Boys present their song in polished instrumental and vocal style.

BBC-TV Show to Tune In on Pic-TV Composer

Grainer's Success Story

London, May 21.

Top film and tv music writer Ron Grainer is to be given another accolade to add to the awards he has won over recent years for his tv and film scores: a 30-minute BBC-TV program going out Saturday (25) which will be devoted to him.

It is being headlined by the "Tonight" team, headed by Cliff Michelmore, who will attempt to put his finger on Grainer's prolific success writing background and mood music for both kinds of film. A 15-piece orchestra, which Grainer himself will conduct, will supply the illustrations.

Grainer, an Australian resident in the U.K. for some years now, has a formidable record of top program music to his credit. On BBC-TV alone he has been responsible for the hit themes of "Maigret," "Steptoe and Son," Michael Bentine's "It's a Square World" and numerous documentaries.

Longplay Shorts

Now it's Eva Eva Gabor who's going to take a crack at the album biz. She's scheduled to record an LP for Barbe Bond & Bob Barbor, the team that produced Vaughn Meader's "The First Family." The deal was set for Miss Gabor by Frank Cooper Assoc . . . Stan Musial, baseballer for the St. Louis Cardinals, has hatted out a premium for RCA Victor's Premium Record Sales Division. The recording, titled "Stan-The-Man's Hit Record," is being distributed through Phillips 66 service stations throughout the U. S. Added on the disk by former big league catcher and sports commentator Joe Garagiola, Musial offers baseball tips and instruction . . . Clint Eastwood, CBS-TV's "Rawhide" star, in New York last week to cut a country & western LP for Cameo-Parkway.

As part of a special experiment in foreign marketing, Warner Bros. Records will release through Telefunken/West Germany, two LP's previously unreleased in the U.S. and especially geared for the foreign market. One set features pianist Buddy Cole with jazz violinist Svend Asmussen. The other spotlights John Rook, who has already clicked in Germany, Switzerland and Austria with his recordings of "Juliora," "Chi Chi," "Egal-Okay" and "Copenhagen Carousel" . . . Decca Records will hold a national sales meeting of all its branch and division managers at New York's Hotel Astor Friday and Saturday (24-25). In addition to receiving details of the label's June album promotion, and future single and album product, the managers will be introduced to the new line of Decca phonographs for 1964.

The Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith is releasing the soundtrack package from the CBS-TV adaptation of Stephen Vincent Benet's Pulitzer Prize-winning poem, "John Brown's Body." It's narrated by Richard Boone and features Douglas Campbell as John Brown . . . Decca is running a special promotion through May 31 on Earl Grant's entire catalog of 12 LPs including his just released "Yes Sirree" . . . Calpix Records has scheduled a June release for "Let Freedom Ring," an album which features Frederic March narrating the Declaration of Independence and identifying famous bells and carillons across the nation, and Burgess Meredith reading the Bill of Rights. The disk was conceived as a result of efforts of Eric Sloane and Eric Sloich to revive the pre-Civil War custom of ringing bells in celebration of Independence Day . . . John Facciola, tv actor-narrator who recorded "Love Letters" on the Jubilee label, will appear on the Catskill Mountain circuit this summer . . . The Highwaymen will turn the Bell Sound Studios in New York into a hootenanny tomorrow (Thurs.) with invited guests on hand for their recording session of "Hootenanny With The Highwaymen" to be released by United Artists.

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

LITTLE PEGGY MARCH . . . . . I WISH I WERE A PRINCESS
(RCA Victor) . . . . . My Teenage Castle

Little Peggy March's "I Wish I Were A Princess" (Atrium†) follows her "I Will Follow Him" click with a teen-slanted belter that will leave its mark on payoff brackets. "My Teenage Castle" (Phaect) is a torcher for teeners but it won't set the turntables on fire.

PAUL & PAULA . . . . . FIRST QUARREL
(Philips) . . . . . School Is There

Paul & Paula's "First Quarrel" (LeBill-Marbitt) continues their clicko duing formula with a lyric angle and beat that will make lots of young friends. "School Is There" (LeBill-Marbitt) beats out a schoolager's story about term's end with a persuasive beat and a familiar love lyric idea.

THE HIGHWAYMEN . . . . . MIDNIGHT TRAIN
(United Artists) . . . . . All My Trials

The Highwaymen's "Midnight Train" (Dunes†) chugs along a folk line carrying lots of spinning freight for the programmers. "All My Trials" (J. Shinkt) has soothing lullabye characteristics that will charm enough spinners to give it an okay spinning ride.

THE BLUE SONNETS . . . . . THANK YOU, MR. MOON
(Columbia) . . . . . It's Never Too Late

The Blue Sonnets' "Thank You, Mr. Moon" (Blackwood†) showcases a new vocal group with a catch-on harmony styling that gives the ballad a spinning pickup that will take off. "It's Never Too Late (To Fall In Love)" (Grand Conquest) is still another topnotch display of their harmony work which will soon become quite familiar to the teen trade.

ROLF HARRIS . . . . . TIE ME KANGAROO DOWN, SPORT
(Epic) . . . . . The Big Black Hat

Rolf Harris' "Tie Me Kangaroo Down, Sport" (Beechwood†) has jumped out of his "Sun Arise" LP because of the strong novelty accent which should help give this Australian singer another lift up here. "The Big Black Hat" (Beechwood†) is another novelty item with a highly rhythmic beat to attract attention.

ROY ORBISON . . . . . FALLING
(Monument) . . . . . Distant Drums

Roy Orbison's "Falling" (Acuff-Rose†) will rise high on the spinning circuit because of the highly dramatic reading and stimulating orch backing. "Distant Drums" (Combine†) bangs out a fair ballad entry for moderate spinning results.

APRIL STEVENS & NINO TEMPO
(WE'LL ALWAYS BE) TOGETHER
(Atco) . . . . . Baby Weemus

April Stevens & Nino Tempo's "(We'll Always Be) Together" (Daddy Sam†) blends an insinuating ducting style with a fetching musical sound that will attract plenty of spinning interest. "Baby Weemus" (Daddy Sam†) has a free-wheeling rhythmic drive that will work especially well around the jukes.

BERT KAEMPFERT ORCH . . . . . DANKE SCHOEN
(Decca) . . . . . Give And Take

Bert Kaempfert Orch's "Danke Schoen" (Roosevelt†) spells out a romantic theme in a continuous melodic vein that will command spinning attention all over. "Give And Take" (Roosevelt†) springs at a lively instrumental pace with a trumpeting highlight to please many programmers.

DARRELL McCALL . . . . . MUD
(Philips) . . . . . No Place To Hide

Darrell McCall's "Mud" (Famous†) is the title number of the upcoming Paramount pic and has the western song saga style down pat which should give it major action on all spinning levels. "No Place To Hide" (Pamper†) has a slow country-blues quality that has a chance to win over some somber-minded citizens.

BILL EVANS ORCH . . . . . 55 DAYS AT PEKING
(Verve) . . . . . On Broadway

Bill Evans Orch's "55 Days At Peking" (Bronston†) has a hip beat and a highly melodic bossa nova flavor and its pic title tie will help the spinning action. "On Broadway" (Screen Gems-Columbia Pictures†) takes the clicko tune, previously vocalized by The Drifters, for a neat instrumental ride.

THE EXCITERS . . . . . GET HIM
(United Artists) . . . . . It's So Exciting

The Exciters' "Get Him" (Methin†) will get top spinning action because of their driving vocal buildup on the lyric angle that the teeners will find pertinent. "It's So Exciting" (Trio†) gives them an opportunity to shout up a storm and it should stir up the spinning circuit.

NICK NOBLE . . . . . GEE LITTLE GIRL
(Liberty) . . . . . A Rose and a Star

Nick Noble's "Gee Little Girl" (Bourne†) is a ballad pitch to the blue-jeaners and the vocal delivery should woo 'em for a spinning payoff. "A Rose and a Star" (Roncom†) follows a simple ballad line in a comfortable vocal groove for pleasing results.

LEE CLARK . . . . . ALL ALONE IN MY LONELY ROOM
(Atco) . . . . . As Long As You're In Love With Me

Lee Clark's "All Alone In My Lonely Room" (Cotillion-Donnat) is furnished with the rocking beat and the blues shout quality that guarantee turntable action. "As Long As You're In Love With Me" (Cotillion-Donnat) has a slow feel but the vocal punch could stir up the play.

JERRY WALLACE . . . . . JUST WALKING IN THE RAIN
(Challenge) . . . . . San Francisco Mama

Jerry Wallace's "Just Walking In The Rain" (Golden West†) pours out an old Johnnie Ray click with a similar vocal attack that could drive it to the top again. "San Francisco Mama" (4-Star Sales†) follows honky-tonk blues line with lots of spinning spirit.

Csida Reactivates 3-Way Operation; Publishing, Act Mgt., Disk Making

After a two-and-a-half month hitch on jury duty after selling his Trinity Music operation to Bobby Darin, Joe Csida has begun reactivation of tri-pronged operation of music publishing, talent management and record productions and is expanding in three major areas.

The first expansion area is that of facilities. Csida will represent a new, modern pressing plant in the eastern territories, primarily, of course, in New York. His initial client in this phase of his operations is the Standard Record Pressing Co. in Nashville. The plant began operation Friday (17) and will have an immediate capacity of between 8,000,000 and 16,000,000 records per year. J. D. Tyner is president of Standard. Eddy Arnold, A. O. Buck and C. M. Everhart are officers. Kelley Pace will be superintendent of operations.

The second area of Csida's expansion is in specialized record service. He has organized a new firm called Record Representatives, Inc. Its purpose is to represent personalities, producers, writers, and even other talent managers in the area of their record activities only.

Seven New Clients

In this phase, Csida is representing seven new clients, among whom are The Kingston Trio. Csida assists the trio's longtime manager, Frank Werber, in the recording areas only, and has no connection with any other phase of the group's activities. The new firm also represents comedian Phil Leeds, writer Herb Hartig, and folk singer-writer Mark Spoelstra.

The third area embraces a service for accounts in foreign countries. Negotiations for the first of what will be a number of international representations are now in progress.

All the foregoing are in addition to Csida's basic music publishing, talent management and record producing operations. Csida's BMI firm (which he owns with Eddy Arnold), Davidson County Music, has hired Paul Wyatt as professional manager in Nashville. An ASCAP firm is now being organized. The talent management operation continues to represent Eddy Arnold and radio-tv personality Jim Lowe. The record producing wing already has sessions scheduled with several producers.

May Head New Dishery

Commenting on recent reports that he was going to become president of a new Nashville record company, Csida said, "I am a good friend of veteran securities man Frank Poole and the other key people who are planning to launch a major record company, substantially based in Nashville.

"I believe that they have every chance of financing and launching a major record operation. I have had extensive talks with them on the question of becoming president of the company when its financing is completed. The financing will no doubt take some time. While these plans go forward, I am reactivating and expanding my present operations.

"If the time comes when it seems advisable for me to become president of the new company, I will make whatever adjustments are necessary in my present operations. I will certainly see to it that none of the people I am now representing or serving in any way, will suffer from any move I make."

Meantime, Csida is seeking personnel for his new operations.

Brascia & Tybee Join Cugat Lane O'seas Unit

Hollywood, May 21.

Brascia & Tybee, dance team which closed stand with Nat King Cole Saturday (18) at Cocoanut Grove, joins European tour June 12 with unit Xavier Cugat and Abbe Lane are taking abroad. First stand is in Rome, followed by dates in Madrid, London, Trieste and Venice.

While in London, Cugat lineup will tape two segments for inclusion in CBS-TV Ed Sullivan shows next season.

Dr. Oldberg, Chi Symph Prez, Won't Run Again

Chicago, May 21.

Dr. Eric Oldberg, prexy of the Orchestral Assn., sponsoring body for the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, for the past 11 years, has disclosed that he will not stand for election next season.

Dr. Oldberg, a neurosurgeon, has headed the Assn. during some of the orchestra's finest years. Last fall he negotiated a three-year contract with the Chicago Federation of Musicians through the summer of 1965. Son of Midwestern composer Arne Oldberg, he has been a member of the Symphony board for 21 years.

Disneyland's 265G For Bands & Acts To Lure Nite Biz

Hollywood, May 21.

Disneyland again this summer season will place great emphasis on music to attract nighttime park revelers and to this end will spend approximately $265,000 — possibly more, as all bookings aren't set—on teasers and acts.

Summer season begins June 1 with four name orchs on top—bands of Les Brown, Gene Krupa, Lionel Hampton and Charlie Barnet. On top of that one-nighter a flock of other regular orchs and combos will be on hand, too.

In addition to the Disneyland marching band of 40-odd pieces, other regular fixtures to be working park this summer will be the big band of the Elliott Bros., Harvey Brooks-Johnny St. Cyr old-time Dixie combo on the riverboat; another Dixie crew billed The Strawhatters; Kay Bell & The Spacemen, an upbeat combo; Dapper Dan Quartet, Gonzalez Trio, Firehouse Five Plus Two ten week-ender and The Royal Tahitians (8).

Acts booked as summerlong regulars include Andre Tahon's "Marottes," French puppet-like act which played Las Vegas in a "Folies Bergere" edition.

Name bands booked for stands to date include Count Basie, June 28-July 4; Tex Beneke (with Paula Kelly & The Modernaires as well as Bob Eberle) July 22-27; Harry James, Aug. 27-Sept. 1.

Two vocal aggregations also are set summerlong—The Yachtsman Quartet and the Gertrude Ward Singers. Latter is the gospel turn. Climax comes with annual Dixieland Nights, Sept 27-28, with Louis Armstrong and Dukes of Dixieland set along with Teddy Buckner's arch.

Last summer Disneyland spent overall around $240,000 on acts and musicians during the four-month span and the year before—first time it was tried on vast scale, around $200,000 was dished out. It's estimated. Returns have paid off to date.

Stewart to Victor As Creative Planning Mgr.

A new post at RCA Victor—manager of creative planning—will be taken over by Larry Stewart. According to Ben Bonner, manager of Victor's pop artists & repertoire department, Stewart will be responsible for the conception and planning of new ideas for albums and aid in coordination of creative activities in the New York, L.A. and Nashville offices.

Stewart, who will be based in N.Y., has a long list of show biz credits that includes work as a singer, actor, writer-producer in tv and radio and disk jockey. He was also the vocalist who replaced Dick Haymes with the Tommy Dorsey band. He also sang and recorded with such bandleaders as Ray Noble, Leo Reisman and Freddy Martin.

In recent years, Stewart has added to his administrative background by devoting much of his time to management consultant work.

DON ROTH TRIO
The Elms, Excelsior Springs, Mo.

Since the Sheraton organization took over the Elms Hotel at the Excelsior Springs spa and began to revitalize it about a year ago, music for dancing has been a nightly policy in the Southwind Lounge, except on Friday and Saturdays when the crew moves into the Garden Room for dinner dancing. The hotel goes in for better aggregations, and for the spring and summer season has the Don Roth Trio.

The threesome is led by Roth on accordion and vibes, with Bill McPherson at the Hammond, and John Lancaster on drums. They have played most of the key spots in this area, and now primarily are dividing their time between the Sheraton Elms and the Kansas City Club (fall, winter).

Their music is smooth for dancing with Roth alternating the lead from accordion to vibes, McPherson emphasizing the versatility of the organ and Lancaster providing the rhythms. There is a solid following for this crew that helps to bring tourists from the metropolitan centers.

They oblige with standards, as the tourists desire, but also can chime in with Latino rhythms, a Twist or swing. Oddly, Roth reports that while the crew is prepared for the hoss nove, it's a seldom request, heated by the cha-cha 10 to one and by the rhumba five to one.

Saturday nights the Elms adds a floor show in the Garden Room, bringing in an act or two from K.C. or Chi for the occasion. This time (May 11) it was Ron & Joanne Highley, a singing duo. They warble mostly from musical comedy and light opera. Ron, a baritone, and Joanne, a soprano, are a good looking couple and they play the sweetheart bit for strong response. The Roth Trio adds a display piece, "The Enchanted Sea," and the 40-minute show is highly apropos for the occasion.

Lotsa Dealers, 2 Disk Mfrs. Praise Col Disk Club at FTC N.Y. Hearing

A flock of record dealers and a couple of disk manufacturers last week helped Columbia Records fortify its stand that the disk club has generally helped the industry. Their testimony was heard in New York during the second week of the Federal Trade Commission's investigation into the Columbia Record Club operation. The investigation hearings moved to L.A. Monday (20) and are scheduled to resume again in N.Y. for a three-week run on June 3.

Presenting the dealer views that the club was not in competition with the retailers and the club's heft advertising schedule broadened the base of consumer awareness of records were George Prince, of Doubleday in N.Y.; Ben Karol, of King Karol in N.Y.; Louis del Padre, of Springfield, Mass.; Bertram Inden, of Chicago; Dan Blincoe, of Louisville, Irving Arlen, of the Mercu Enterprises rack jobbers; Milton Dulap owner of a retail shop in Oklahoma City and Eliot Leonard, of Harvard Cooperative Society, a college retail store chain.

Backs All Disk Ads

One of Leonard's main points was that any advertising of records is good no matter who does it. Along similar lines, Dunlap said, "The club has helped business in that it has been the medium of getting people started in buying records who might not have started otherwise."

Presenting the manufacturer views were Dave Kapp, head of Kapp Records, and Don Pierce, owner of Starday Recording & Publishing of Nashville.

In giving his reasons for putting some of his disks into the Columbia club, Kapp said, "We felt that the kind of records which we represented needed a market which we were not getting through the normal sources, which was the record dealer. It was an added outlet, a very important outlet for what we wanted to sell."

In a more lengthy statement, Pierce said of the club, "I think it represents plus business that a record manufacturer needs and I think that in the competitive field of obtaining artists and good material, it assumes importance. I think that the particular type of product that I make needs outlets other than the traditional record dealer because country music buyers are often rural or they live in small towns.

"They are people that are used to buying from mail order houses, like Sears, Roebuck, Montgomery-Ward, or houses like that, and they don't often get to a town, and when they do get to a town it is often a small one which does not support a dealer. If it does have a dealer, it may not be a real active dealer with an adequate inventory."

Prefers Mail Order Disks

"I think, too, that the country music buyer is often shy and sometimes a little bit reluctant to speak up and ask for his preferences in music and often prefers to order his record in the privacy of his home."

Regarding the effect of the record club on business, Pierce declared, "I think they have broadened the base and helped to make it a larger industry for more people to participate in. I think that it might be compared somewhat to the situation that prevailed before BMI. There were vested interests that had a monopoly on all the licensing of performing rights and certainly they didn't want to see any changes in the setup.

"But when BMI came into being it became possible for hundreds and thousands of new writers and new publishers to engage in the music publishing industry. In recent years the industry has grown tremendously and BMI is accepted and ASCAP, although they originally opposed it, is taking in more money than ever before as a result of a greatly expanded industry.

"By the same token, the music industry undergoes a change. As rack jobbers came into operation and chain stores, more people became conscious of phonograph records and the entire industry got bigger and created more opportunity for more people to engage in it. I consider that record clubs are only one of several changes in a changing pattern."

Jerry Johnson Quits Ava for Indie Promo

Jerry Johnson, who has been head of national promotion for Fred Astaire's Ava Records, has left the company to go back to independent promotion.

No replacement for Johnson has been set yet. Ava's promotional men around the country are Luis Fields (Coast), Pete Wright (Chicago), Bert Haber (N.Y.), Dave Segal (Ohio) and Ed Penny (Mass.)

Pickwick Buys Tops, a Pioneer Lowprice Label

Cy Leslie, president of Pickwick International, has added another dishery to his combine with the acquisition of Tops Records last week. The purchase price was undisclosed but no stock was involved in the transaction, which did not include Tops' payables or receivables, or Coast factory.

Tops, a pioneer in the lowprice disk field, had gross sales in 1962 of over $4,000,000. For the fiscal year ended April 30, 1963 (now being audited), Pickwick estimates its own sales at approximately $5,000,000 and earnings about 60c per share.

The Tops catalog includes such artists as Mel Torme, David Rose, Percy Faith, Duke Ellington, Frankie Laine, Kay Starr, Lawrence Welk and Sarah Vaughn. It also has LP's of Broadway show scores and film scores.

Pickwick will completely reorganize the Tops executive and sales staff and incorporate its clerical billing and production

Inside Stuff—Music

Dave Brubeck was in Milwaukee recently with his quartet and disclosed that while there in 1961 he was nearly dropped from musicians' union because of an unpublicized dispute. "I was interviewed on WTMJ and sat at a piano, without playing it," he said. "Because I hadn't asked a certain union official for permission to appear, he threatened to blackball me. That would have prevented me from playing with union musicians anywhere. And they can make it stick.

"Milwaukee's the only city in the country that laugh," Brubeck said. The president of the Milwaukee musicians' local, Velmer Dahlstrand, said he did not recall the incident.

Pianist Randy Weston, Colpix disker, left last week on a 10-day trip to Lagos, Nigeria, where he'll take part in a series of panel discussions to be held in the West African Center there. His trip is being sponsored by the American Society of African Culture. Shortly before leaving for Africa, Weston recorded an album of African highlife, for Colpix. The LP, titled "African Highlife and Music of the New African Nations," has been scheduled for release early in June. The highlife is a dance and rhythm which originated in nations on the west coast of Africa. It resembles the calypso and samba in tempo.

Glenn Gould, Canadian pianist who records for Columbia Records, is moving into semi-retirement as far as his concert schedule is concerned. He's now going to limit himself to six concerts a year (he had been doing between 20 and 30) to concentrate on composition and recordings. Meantime, his LP of the "Goldberg Variations," released by Columbia about six years ago, is selling at a 3,000-a-year clip, and his "Well-Tempered Clavier," released three months ago, has already sold 10,000 copies exclusive of the club. The June issue of Hi Fi Stereo Review features a piece on Gould by Robert Offergeld, mag's new editor.

The 1963 Laurel Leaf Awards of the American Composers Alliance was presented last Thursday (16) to Claire R. Reis, head of the League of Composers, and Carl Haverlin, president of Broadcast Music Inc. The annual award, now in its 13th year year, is for "Distinguished Achievement In Fostering And Encouraging American Music." The presentations were made at the Contemporary Music Society's concert given in honor of the 25th anni of the Alliance at New York's Museum of Modern Art.

The Indianapolis Speedway now has an official song. It's "It's A Grand Old Day (Out At The Old Speedway)" and was written by Hoagy Carmichael. Mills Music is publishing. It will be featured at the various fests before the May 30 race and at the Speedway Parade in which 30 to 50 bands from throughout the state take part.

Paul Heinecke, president of SESAC, received a plaque last Sunday (19) from Music for the Blind, Inc. at the Musicthon in New York's Carnegie Hall. The plaque was accorded Heinecke for SESAC's service in aiding the musical education of the blind. The presentation was made by Albert G. Gordon, president of Music for the Blind.

Richard Himber, maestro-songwriter, has written words and music of "At The Top Of The Fair," dedicated to the official restaurant of New York's 1964 World's Fair, George Hyam, who will operate the eatery, assigned the clefting job to Himber, who also made a demo record of the tune with 50 musicians and a choir of 15 vocalists featuring Jean Martin.

Al Siegel Authors Good Basic Primer in 'How To Become Pro Pop Singer'

Al Siegel, who has tutored Ethel Merman, Mary Martin, Lucille Ball, Lisa Kirk, Vivian Blaine and Carol Channing among others, has written an authoritative book, "How To Become a Professional Pop Singer" (Citadel; $3.95) which should be a good basic primer for all aspirants. Pros, too, may gain some pointers.

Siegel, who has been a song-smith and arranger before vocal coaching, spells out realistic advice on phrasing, acting, song interpretation, styling, what do with your hands, personality, attire, breathing, pronunciation. There are practical analyses of ballad, rhythm, torch, rock 'n' roll and kindred styles. Songsmith-producer Jule Styne who used to work for Siegel, wrote the brief intro.

The deal for Richard's Epic tie was negotiated by Nat Shapiro, director of Columbia-Epic's international artists & repertoire and creative services; attorney Paul Marshall, representing Electric & Musical Industries (EMI), and Ronald Rennie of EMI.

Epic is releasing a new single by Richard, "The Next Time," and has plans to release the soundtrack of his film, "Summer Holiday" when it opens in this country in the fall.

Leslie will act as president of the new affiliate which will be called The Kimberly Corp.

Two years ago, Tops added the recordings of the late Eli Oberstein's estate; Bandy, Bandolette, Ultraphonic, Hudson, Even, Allegro, Acorn, Halo and Galaxie Records to it's own Kimberly, Golden Tone, Craftsman, Bronze and Mayfair Records. These 14 lines will now be reduced to three selected from the best-selling and highest quality material in the entire catalog.

Kimberly's sales will be under the aegis of Louis Capone and creative packaging will be supervised by Albert Lutz, who will also continue as product director for Pickwick International. Both men will report directly to Leslie.

'No Exit' Track With Viveca Lindfors Rescues Electronic Music Recital

By LEONARD L. LEVINSON

An evening of oddball music, mixed with snap, crackle and pop, along with a smorgas of bubble and squeak provided by various onstage soloists and combos, backed by three electronic tapemachines (9 channels) giving out over 30 loudspeakers scattered throughout McMillin Auditorium and balcony, opened the three-nights of new music and dance presented by Columbia U's music department in cooperation with the Arts Center Program and the Columbia-Princeton Electronic Music Center.

Program was rescued from the typical futility of an electronic-cum-modern-music ear assault by a brilliant demonstration of effective usage of this fledgling medium a tap-notch, professional half-hour performance by Viveca Lindfors and Vladimir Ussachevsky's tape, excerpted from the film "No Exit."

Jean-Paul Sartre as Hell is an apt subject to background on tape and Miss Lindfors in the first concert performance of these scenes turns in a virtuoso performance, playing the two femmes and one male character with a wide range of voice, dynamics, humor and story-telling. Strengthened with additional off-beat material, or lengthened, this is a refreshing and intriguing candidate for concert hashing here and abroad. Text adaptation by George Tabori was most effective in pointing up the Sartre dialog and sync between Miss Lindfors and Ussachevsky at the tape machines was flawless. The actress was backed by the evening's only attempt at production.

"No Exit" segment opened second half of evening caught and so overshadowed what went on before and after that the other items, lacking in form and frame, seemed, stumbling, evolutionary steps along the way to a wedding between electronic sound and conventional musical instruments. Electronic Study No. 2 with Contrabass, by Charles Whittenberg, with Bertram Turetsky on the bull fiddle, opened evening's program and would be most acceptable to a Broadway audience with Zero Mostel as soloist and title changed to "Night Under Grand Central Station." "Fantasia For String Trio" by the late Irving Fine was a 13-minute study in dissonance played with fluency and verve by a student trio, Kenneth Goldsmith, violin; Pamela Goldsmith, viola; and Joel Krosnick, cello. Maybe this kind of music should always be played by young musicians with their lack of inhibitions about changing tempi, unusual entrances, offbeat keys, etc. These three seem to perform with much greater grace and comfort than their elder colleagues. Third item was a substitution: Mario Davidovsky's Study No. 2 for Luciano Berio's "Frammenti," withdrawn by the composer to make further revisions. The Davidovsky work was straight tape recording and the audience sat looking at a stark, dark stage while being attacked at the back of the neck, and at the sides, by the 10 loudspeakers, each with its own amplifier, erupting with what must be termed "non-directional music." Charles Wourinen's Second Trio for Flute, cello and piano sounded to this auditor like bad cacophony. Hardly a better report can be given for "Sonority Canons" for four live and 22 recorded flutes by Otto Luening, for the 26 were so scattered and ineffective that their pinpointing could have easily been produced by the four onstage flautists. Closer, Music for String Quartet and Tape by Bulent Arel (first performance) presages better things 'acoustic' for Ampex, as it achieved a closer integration between live strings and electronic sound than any of the other pieces.

Composer sat centre stage, dialing his tape machine, flanked by Camerata Quartet (the Goldsmiths, Krosnick, and Barry Allen, violin) and each section like sand, either by Arel flipping a switch or one of the live musicians leading off. They all ended together, which was better than the triumph of the machine in several of the other works, where the live musicians stood, egg on face, as the tape took the cue. Incidentally, a visitor from another planet might wonder at the concentration of energy on attempting to approximate musical sounds by electronics, while no effort is made to solve the old, awkward, messy problem of page-turning. Now, if someone would only perfect an electronic music teleprompter.

Viet Nam's 'No Dancing'

land, Josie Dwyer; and Miss California, Merylyn Tindall. The event, duly noted by the Times of Viet Nam, was sponsored by the Lion's Club—"a men's club."

Among the other features: Ralph Lombardi was at the piano at the Majestic Hotel; Cao Thai and Patty Pink, both singers, were holding down at the Au Bacara, one of the better-known night spots.

In bars and night spots, American troops are the best customers, and former dancing girls, singers and hostesses are all switching from French to English. The charming Vietnamese hostess will sidle up to the American, and after addressing him in her best American as wishing to become his "Number One Girl," will hold his hand to prove a point. The young ladies are particularly intrigued by the hairiness of the Yankee forearm and before long the charmer is inquiring "How long you be here," and, at the same time trying to braid those hairs into conversation pieces.

That's What They Think!

Government officials would have you believe that the no-dancing edict — and this applies to your apartment, too—and other strict regulations within the moral code promulgated by the sister of the Buddhist head of state, have proved effective. But, they will allow that the mores and habits of men and women haven't changed despite the ban.

The 15 biggest dancehalls, they say, have become theatres and restaurants. In theatres, acts are being booked and extend over three hours per evening. Most acts revolve around various singing performances, with American tunes on The Twist theme, the ever-wholesome favorites.

Music combos are popular, too, and performers are paid according to the theatre management's judgment. It is not infrequent that an act will hit several different theatres per night. Average stay, one or two numbers and a repeat if the audience whoops it up. At the Anh-Vu, for example, the talent would have sparked the heart of Major Bowes, or any lover of the true amateur hour. There's no admission charge, but your first drink costs approximately 60c American, and you can stay as long as you like, sipping one or more libations, generally of the soft drink variety.

TV has made its debut, but there is only a half-hour session at 7:30 a.m.; another half hour at 1 p.m.; and a 90-minute session at 9 p.m. that is heavy on the news, talk, and documentary side.

Youth Pix Still Big

TV apparently has not hurt the film business. The GI's have a three-a-week change at their PX, and the natives frequent the major 17 Saigon shows that are overwhelmingly American with dubbed subtitles. American movies lead by a 4-to-1 margin, according to distributors and Westerns are the favorites—the influence of shootings and right-and-wrong guys are quite evident.

The Vietnamese are stepping up their output of films. Thran Van Ban, director of National Motion Pictures, who is assisted by a staff including two Americans, Jules and Miriam Bucher, are turning out full-length films, along with many independent producers. Last year, over 30 film productions were completed, and an even more aggressive program is underway this year. Among the projected items—a weekly tv news show, 10 minutes long, to be distributed to all theatres. The Vietnamese newsreel is translated into English and French for limited showing in embassies overseas.

Rough Language

that might be expected of the delinquent geniuses of an asphalt jungle.

This substantiated the point being made by Ritt. There can be a suggestion of foulness in talk, if belittling the character on screen, without being out and out foul.

Ritt, a veteran in acting and directing legit and television, in addition to his film work, was engineered into a little discussion of show business blacklisting. Variety's reporter asked him about it.

Ritt said, yes he was a victim of a very real blacklist some years ago when someone on Aware identified him as being with a theatre group that was supposed to have been too left of centre. He found it impossible to get a tv job as a result, but couldn't fight back because there wasn't any kind of direct accusation which he could deny. Also, "it costs money to sue."

He thinks there still is a blacklist in "limited, sensitive areas in tv"—sponsors being what they are—but it has been largely "muted as a result of Peter Faulk's libel victory, via attorney Louis Nizer, over Aware.

damages was filed last Thursday (9) in New Orleans Federal Court against Miss Baez for her failure to fulfill the Loyola commitment. The action was brought by Irvin S. Smith, head of S&S Productions.

Comment From Artist

Knoxville, Tenn., May 21.

Folk singer Joan Baez gave the audience a lecture on racial relations last week at Knoxville Civic Auditorium during an abrupt intermission in her program.

"I guess that's what happens when you chop up the races—there's not much left of the human race," she said. Then she began a musical lament, "All my troubles, Lord, soon be over . . ."

At the end of one of the choruses, Miss Baez stopped, looked up, and said, "I'm sorry, we'll have an intermission now." Then she walked off the stage with her head down.

Attendance for the program was only 800 persons, who warmly applauded the singer who has been touring the South.

who in 1964 earns 120% or more than his average earnings in the last four years, provided further that the additional income is at least $3,000 more than the same average of the four prior years, can recompute his taxes for all five years.

He can average all five and be liable for the same tax for each of the five. This would greatly reduce the 1964 tax. The plan has long been strongly advocated by show biz folk.

N.Y. CAFE INFLATION ON WAY?

'Six Gun Territory,' a $1,500,000 Fla. 'Frontier' Oasis, Eyes 1,000,000 Visitors

By ODIE ANDERSON

Ocala, Fla., May 21.

When the smoke clears after each hourly street brawl at "Six Gun Territory," Florida's newest amusement mecca, it is clearly visible that R. B. Coburn has bred another winner, a robust duplicate of his two-year-old, "Ghost Town" in Maggie Valley, N. C.

Strategically located between Silver Springs tourists' lure of long standing and Ocala, the 228-acre "Territory" is already overflowing town limits, a scant three months after opening.

Entrance to the "Territory" is marked by a 60-foot high, 250-foot long manmade mountain, fronted by an "old" railroad station consisting a 4,000-car parking area. Weekends of May 4 and 11, when Dan Blocker, Moss Cartwright of "Bonanza" appeared three or four times daily, saw an equal number of cars spilling over onto adjoining roadside.

Blocker followed Clint Walker, who portrays Cheyenne Bodie, and sidekick Clyde Howdie; Chu Gulager, "Billy The Kid"; John Bromfield, "Sheriff of Cochise"; and Allen Case, "The Deputy." Spot bookings of other gunslingers are in the mill. Local talent includes Jack Wilson as Doc Holliday and other pistol packin' hombres trained by "Ghost Town" vets—all in western garb.

Train Robbers 'n' Indians

All-inclusive admission — $2 adults and $1 children—includes fare on 1880 vintage, coal burning railway through two-mile area where passengers are frequently set upon by train robbers and Indians. Flowering cacti, a lonesome wagon train, sodbuster's cabin and bleached bones color the landscape, and the ride terminates at another frontier station, complete with potbellied stove, clicking telegraph keys and plank benches.

Passengers may stay for an hour or all day, to watch outlaws blast away in street fights, see bank holdups foiled by the marshal or watch Digger the undertaker measure clients. Routine shows in the Palace Saloon, where local high school and college girls execute the can-can, are free; only admission made is for the Indian dances, performed by imported Oklahoma Indians.

More than 40 fullscale buildings, artificially aged, include a log chapel, the old Frontier Hotel (where stars are lodged) the Gazette News, Red Dog Saloon, blacksmith shop, a Mexican village, trading post, the fort, court house, ice cream parlor—and Morrison's restaurant.

Coburn, at a cost of $1,500,000 has created an attraction for kids —of all ages. The very young, having cut teeth on the video westerns, comprise a third of the daily attendance. No alcohol is served; although red eye and cactus juice soft drinks are sold in saloons and cafes.

"Territory" was planned and designed by Russell Pearson, who masterminded "Ghost Town" and "Frontier City"—near Oklahoma City—also, and collaborated on "Old Tucson" and engineered "Silver Dollar City" of the Ozarks near Springfield, Mo. He doubles as town marshal at "Six Gun," aiding Mayor Coburn.

Set Mahalia's Benefit For Dr. King At $25 Top

Chicago, May 21.

The Chad Mitchell Trio, Dick Gregory, Dinah Washington and Al Hibbler will take part in Mahalia Jackson's benefit show here May 27 for Rev. Martin Luther King's Southern Christian Conference. With tickets scaled from $25 to $2 at the 5,000-seat Arie Crown Theatre in McCormick Place, Miss Jackson hopes to raise more than $25,000 for King's cause.

Publisher John Johnson is bonusing all ticket purchasers in any price range, with subscriptions to his Ebony Magazine.

Prep 'Disneyland' For Britain's Isle of Man

Isle of Man, Eng., May 21.

This holiday island may get its own Disneyland. A private company is mulling such a development outside the main town of Douglas.

Billy Smart, English circus owner, originally planned to build a Disneyland in Blackpool, northwest England, last year, but negotiations with Blackpool Corporation broke down. Now some of the ideas which Smart had intended to use have been offered to the Isle of Man planners.

Bruce Guilty On Coast Dope Rap

Los Angeles, May 21.

Lenny Bruce's third appearance in local courts over a week's period climaxed last week with his being found guilty Thursday (16) of narcotics possession. Comic comes up for sentencing June 4 before Superior Judge Benjamin Landis. He faces possible imprisonment of from two to 10 years. His attorney, John Marshall, said he will move for a new trial.

Bruce also faces a one-year jail sentence and $1,000 fine in Chicago, where he was convicted last Feb. 23 in absentia on a charge of having performed in a lewd show. He now has a $2,500 appeal bond posted in this case.

Comedian, who currently is doing a one-man show at LeGrand Theatre in Hollywood, previously was freed here at suits heard on successive days. On May 9, Superior Judge Alfred P. Peracca decreed that officers who arrested Bruce Feb. 22 in a taxicab after searching it had conducted an illegal search and dismissed the case.

Following day (10) Municipal Judge Maurice T. Leader released Bruce in a fugitive proceedings hearing when he learned comic had posted the $2,500 appeal bond in Chicago.

Canada's Four Atlantic Provinces Boast Unique Status—Not One Nightclub

Halifax, N.S., May 21.

Canada's four Atlantic provinces —Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland — have not a single nightclub among them. Consensus is that Maritimers, with typical Maritimers' caution, hesitate to invest. With no local precedents, they have no way of knowing what such an investment would bring.

One likely gauge could be a Halifax room called The Captain's Cabin. Downstairs from an eatery, room seats approximately 250, books small combos for continuing music, including Hawaiian, r 'n' r, folk, others, and does capacity business regularly.

There are five other, smaller, rooms in Halifax, one with no attempt at entertainment, another with piped music. Others use fiddler, organist, or canary with combo backing.

Halifax has nearly 100,000 population including army, navy, air force personnel. It's one of North America's busiest seaports and has a fast-growing, lobster-guzzling tourist trade spurred by a wide-awake provincial tourist bureau.

Consensus also has it that a room such as The Captain's Cabin could expand its capacity, book Canadian or United States name performers and reap top financial harvest. First, though, the Maritime caution would have to crack, or the investment come from elsewhere.

SALARY CEILING SEEN CRACKING

Despite the fact that the price line of talent in New York has been holding up well, there are increasing signs that salary ceilings are cracking and bonifaces will have to pay more for the top echelon of names.

Two factors are leading the talent agencies to believe that a breach is imminent. One is the prices being offered by the Americana Hotel, which now has Donald O'Connor working at $15,000 weekly. The other is the Town & Country Club, Brooklyn, which has been paying stratospheric prices.

Incumbent Robert Goulet is getting $15,000 at the T. & C. Milton Berle, who just completed a four-weeker there, got $22,500 which included the rest of the acts on the bill.

However, the major factor in the price rise, according to some talent agents, is the fact that it's becoming increasingly difficult to lure the toppers into New York. There are many names who have bypassed the city for years. Others are now eyeing the concert variety type shows in theaters which can pay even higher than niteries. The midtown spots and hotels find that they continually have to shell out more in order to attract the top strata of headliners.

Biter's Other Fangs

The fact that some niteries including the Town & Country, along with the Latin Casino, Cherry Hill, N. J., are paying herculean sums to talent has also altered the cafe salary setup. These spots with kingsized capacities are able to pile them in, especially on weekends, and together with pre-booked banquet business, they are able to share the wealth with the performers.

It was originally felt that because of the proximity of the Lat-

Berger Kisses Porter's 'Kate' Suit Goodbye With Out-of-Court Settlement

Minneapolis, May 21.

On the day the case was to have gone to trial theatre circuit owner and restaurateur Bennie Berger made an out-of-court settlement of a Federal court suit brought by composer Cole Porter against his Schiek's, a local dining and supper club establishment.

Porter sued for an injunction to restrain Schiek's from continuing with an alleged tab version of the musical comedy hit, "Kiss Me Kate," for which he wrote the music and lyrics. Copyright infringement was charged and Porter also sought $35,000 damages.

Berger declined to reveal how much he paid Porter, but said it was considerably less than $35,000. He also said Schiek's would continue with the show, "which isn't a musical comedy, but simply comprises songs and a few dances from the musical, following the lines of other Schiek's presentations." A mixed sextet appears in the performances.

A similar suit was brought against Schiek's 14 years ago by Rodgers & Hammerstein when the spot was presenting "Oklahoma" numbers. Berger settled that one out of court too.

Berger acquired Schiek's, one of the oldest top dining places here, 16 years ago. The going initially was so rough that he tried unsuccessfully to sell it. Then, 14 years ago, he launched his musical comedy sextet floor show policy and the bistro immediately flourished and has continued to do so with that type of entertainment ever since. The cafe is considered the largest money maker of its kind here.

In his complaint, Porter charged that, without his permission, the spot's singing ensemble was using the title song and a number of others with members dressed in costumes to present parts of the 20-year-old musical.

Penny Again Leading Opposition At AGVA's June Nat'l Convention in N.Y.

Roster of delegates elected last week to the American Guild of Variety Artists Convention to be held June 10-12 indicates a lively powwow inasmuch as vocal opponents of the administration have been tapped for attendance at the Americana Hotel, N. Y., confab. A national board meeting will follow immediately afterward.

Most of the opposition to the administration comes from New York, but pockets of dissenters have been named from Chicago and Los Angeles. However, there are still enough administration votes to override any opposition.

Coloring the meeting will be the fact that two investigations are hanging over the union. One is a forthcoming hearing by the Senate Subcommittee on Permanent Investigations headed by Sen. John McClellan (D-Ark.). The other probe is by the Bureau of Labor Management Reports which has been going over the AGVA books for nearly six months.

The opposition will again be spearheaded by Penny Singleton, elected as a delegate from Los Angeles, who will have as her cohorts Russell Swann and Paul Valentine from New York; Anne O'Connor from Chicago, and Dick Jones, Philadelphia.

The largest number of delegates will come from New York. The delegation includes president Joey Adams, Peggy Alexander, Eddie Barton, Lew Black, Buddy Clayton, Carla Corelli, Sally DeMay, Jack Haley, Frank Keenan, Milt Moss, Georgie Price, Frank Ross, Russell Swann, Arthur Tracey, Paul Valentine, Sally Winthrop and Johnny Woods.

The Chi group will consist of Eddie Burnette, Ray Conlin Sr., Jack Gwynne, Harry Kline, Ann O'Connor and Pat Patton. The Los Angeles delegates are Candy Candido, Herbie Faye, Lenny Kent, Sid Marion, Nick Lucas, Harry Mendoza, Harry Richman, Roy Rogers (not the cowboy), Penny Singleton and Tommy Tucker.

Other delegates are George Petras, representing Atlanta; Tony Smith from Baltimore; Charlie Brett, Boston; Paul Benson, Buffalo; Tom Powell, Cincinnati; Linda Compton, Cleveland; Charlie Hoffman, Dallas; Jay Lester, Denver; Al Tucker and Bill Hart, Detroit; Billy Lee, Honolulu; Buddy Hughes, Kansas City; Leon Fields, Hal Fisher, Gus Van and Buddy Walker, Miami Beach; John Shirley, Minneapolis; Danny Dean, Peter Mann and Florence McNeil, Montreal; Tina Marie, New Orleans; Harry Lewis and Dick Jones, Philadelphia; Ted Bissé and Billy Reed, Pittsburgh; Billy Grant, Portland; Dick Martin, Providence; Danny O'Day, St. Louis.

Former midwest regional director Ernie Flatt, who figured prominently as a witness before the McClellan Committee, has been elected from San Francisco along with Larry Ford and Vince Silk. Russ Byrd will rep Seattle along with two members of the Wallenda Family. Gunther and Karl Toronto delegate is Gus Gordon and Steve Allison will represent Washington.

Kochmann to Rein Acts In Golden Lounge, Reno

Hollywood, May 21.

Wolf Kochmann, partnered with Barry Ashton in packaging nitery revues, will handle talent for lounge of Golden Hotel, Reno, when it reopens in July. An Ashton revue previously was set for Golden main room at $12,000 weekly on lots.

An Ashton show was in hotel when it burned to ground 15 months ago. Rebuilding by brothers Bill and Jim Tomerlin is shaping the Golden on a vaster scale.

PP&M to Preem Forest Hills Fest

The Forest Hills (L.I.) Music Festival has lined up the majority of its attractions for the season, although there is a possibility of shifts. The Fest will open July 6 with Peter, Paul & Mary, to be followed by a bill topped by Ella Fitzgerald.

After an open week, the schedule calls for the Kingston Trio, July 27; Ray Charles, Aug. 3; Johnny Mathis, Aug. 10; Joan Baez, Aug. 17, and the season will close with Sammy Davis Jr. Aug. 24.

All acts are being signed with a rain clause so that in event of bad weather the turn will perform the following night. This year, the Forest Hills Fest, which will be held at the Forest Hills Tennis Club Stadium, will be alone in the field. Last season, there was a rival promotion which started at Randall's Island, N.Y., but failed to complete the season.

Bill Gruman, promoter of the Forest Hills series, was partnered last year with Station WNEW which supplied disk jocks for the emcee assignments and gave tickets as listener lures on various shows.

Pitt Stadium Squabble Cools as City Gets Nod To Take Over Project

Pittsburgh, May 21.

The controversy over the proposed North Side sports stadium was finally settled last week when County Commissioner John McGrady voted with Commissioner John Walker to approve the city's plan to take over the whole project.

The stadium will now be guaranteed completely by the city and will be operated by an authority which will be set up by the city within the next few weeks.

The long and bitter fight put up by Majority Commissioner William McClelland gave the city and county a few more points and they will now share in the profits from pay tv, radio and tv and air space over the development.

When asked by the Pitt VARIETY correspondent what say the city and county will now have in radio and tv profits and policies, Commissioner Walker said, "We'll have about as much to say as to who will play first base."

Page Cavanaugh 'Septet' Opens Own Coast Nitery

Hollywood, May 21.

Page Cavanaugh, singer Kiki Paige and sideman forming Cavanaugh's Page Seven band are partnered in the new Page Cavanaugh nitery which opened last Wednesday (15) in the Valley over the hill from Hollywood on site of old Four Jokers.

Total investment is $35,000, divided equally between Cavanaugh, Miss Paige and group of six bandmen, who include Lew McCreary, Dave Wells, Bob Jung, Jack Sperling, John Pisano and Don Bagley.

'Automated' Travel Helps 'Holiday on Ice' Cut Costs

Knoxville, May 21.

Automated transportation, using some circus techniques, has been adopted by "Holiday On Ice" which begins rehearsals for the 1964 season at Knoxville (Tenn.) Civic Coliseum on July 8. Show's world preem will be held here Aug. 14-20, with Ruth Tyson as director.

The ice company is now traveling in circus-type boxcars. All props, lighting and the stage are transported in 16 piggyback cars which can be towed to the show site by truck or jeep from the railway station.

Efficiency of the new system has eliminated packing and unpacking equipment at railroad stations and cuts the cost of transporting it to the show location.

Talent 'Exchanges' With Soviet Russia No Longer Beguile Gotham Merchants

By JOE COHEN

Unless the Soviet Government permits American showmen taking attractions into Russia and to come out without losing a bagful, deals with Moscow will lose their charm in the view of some U.S. showmen. It's becoming increasingly difficult to get American headliners to go over there in order—under "Exchange"—to permit a similar show to come here.

As an example the Soviets are presently negotiating for Harry Belafonte, but the singer's manager, Phil Stein, is reluctant, fearing a net financial loss. Other talent deals are reported to have collapsed because of what is described in New York as a that's-your-worry-not-ours attitude by Soviet officials. Recent visitors to Russia claim that the Soviets adopt the opinion that American artists or shows benefit from publicity resulting from a tour of Russia. Also, argue the Russians, they cannot afford to pay prevailing American salaries because they do not collect as much for tickets as is obtained in America. Further, its advanced that losses sustained on Soviet tours are U.S. tax deductible, "Maybe you'll make money from your losses."

However, New York talent merchants now declare the day passed when they can afford to take deficits to hold up the State Dept. program. Earlier profits from American tours of Russian attractions offset losses in the USSR but, this is doubtful today inasmuch as several Soviet units, particularly the Beryozka Ballet (all-femme) and Georgia State Dancers were not profitable on American jaunts.

It's believed that the forthcoming Ringling Bros. and Barnum & Bailey tour of Russia next year, will be at a huge loss, to be taken by Morris Chalfen, who is one of the partners in bringing the Moscow State Circus to the U.S. in the fall.

Belafonte deal was to permit Sol Hurok to bring in a show to consist of top stars of the Bolshoi Ballet. However, it's thought that the large scale of the Moscow Circus and Ringling circus exchange May suffice against failure to get another large show to junket in Russia at this time.

American talent managers point out that they have to pay top dollar for anything that comes out of Russia. They have to pay transportation, theatre rentals, promotion, hotel expenses for the cast, translators and so on. In American dollars it comes out to a hefty amount. It's figured that Chalfen et al have to take in $120,000 weekly before seeing a buck on the Moscow State Circus while here. Should he fail to average that figure in U.S. during the 10-week run of the imported circus, then losses incurred on the Soviet end put him that much in the red.

One N.Y. office wondered if the U.S. State Dept. is as anxious to persuade Americans to take losses for a turn at Russian roulette as earlier. They also point out that since everything in Russia is state-owned and operated, the Government makes money in every facet of the tour whether it be from transporting the troupe on the state-owned Aeroflot line, boarding them at the state-owned hotels and showing them in state-owned theatres.

Status Quo

In any event, American theatrical managers are heard stating their conviction more and more that it is difficult if not unlikely to make money on deals for talent made with the Soviet Union. This was the subject of an extended article in this weekly from Moscow last issue. The opinion grows with the Yanks that the trading advantages are all with the USSR. It's a one-way risk for the Yanks with the Soviets declining any.

Individual experiences differ but the costs of sending U.S. talent into Russia, the terms obtainable there and the general yield through fees makes scant appeal. There is no sharing of boxoffice receipts, just flat deals.

Currently, deals have been completed for two units to go into the Soviet. The Baird Marionettes will tour six cities starting in June, and the Clarion Concerts Chamber Orchestra junkets for six weeks in the fall. Both are comparatively low budgeted units requiring no tremendous travel and boarding costs, in comparison to shows like "Holiday on Ice" and "Ice Capades" and the forthcoming Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey Circus jaunt which are geared to heavy break-even points.

State Dept. is now adhering to recommendations made by a committee headed by Roy E. Larsen, Time, Inc. executive committee head, which conducted a study of hiring procedures on the Cultural Exchange Program. Group recommended changes in screening procedures and greater use of amateur groups. These bookings are the first to be made since last September when the program was suspended in view of the Larsen study. Since 1954, Congress annually appropriates $2,500,000 for the Cultural Exchange Program.

NEW MINN. LAW BARS TERP STUDIO 'GOUGING'

St. Paul, May 21.

When he signed a bill just passed by the state legislature limiting the duration of and the amount of fees charged in contracts that dance studios make with students, Minnesota Gov. Karl Rolvaag said he's confident the new law "will solve the problem of gouging by dance schools."

Particularly in Minneapolis, suits involving such alleged gouging have been brought against several dance schools by students, some of them elderly people of both sexes. Plaintiffs in these cases have claimed they were victimized into paying huge tuition fees. The students alleged they not only didn't receive anywhere nearly their money's worth, but also there were misrepresentations. They seek to have their fees returned.

Say Nasser Helps Athens Niteries

Athens, May 21.

Nasser is helping enliven Athens' night life. At least two deluxe additions to this Greek capital's after-dark spots are direct results of Egyptian "expatriation." Syndicate of eight men, all of whom had various businesses in Alexandria before being "invited out," have opened the Donald Scotch Club, Greece's first membership setup. Membership is restricted to 300, and costs about $17 a year. Reciprocal guest privileges have been worked out with the Club 33 in Geneva and the La Licorne and Chez Jimmy's in Paris.

Located in a cellar in the Plaka, the oldest part of Athens, the club has an intimate atmosphere. Comfortable chairs and sofas sufficient for 200 people, a dance area, and a small bar, all of which cost $75,000. Tabs for the Donald Scotch are stiff for Greece, even higher than the recently opened Hilton deluxe bars. Opening night, bar menus listed rye and bourbon at $1.20 per shot and more expensive (by 30c) than Scotch.

Big feature of club is that it has a record-playing film star. Pari Leventi, "Miss World of 1950," who has played lead roles in six Greek films, has been hired to hostess and to keep the stereophonic dance music setup playing.

The other nightspot is the Unica, an excellent restaurant which can match many of the leading one's in major cities of Europe. It was opened by four Greeks, three of whom used to be in Egyptian cotton. Patterned like an elegant English tearoom, the Unica is chic all the way up to the chief (Mitsos), who cooks individual orders on a portable kitchen in black tie. He and his staff were formerly at the Manor House in Cairo. Piano music and a delightful bar for nightcaps and late chatting are other features besides the good food.

Other recent additions to Athens nightlife have been the Symposium and the Nine Muses, both in the old Plaka section. These two are primarily bars. The Nine Muses is best described as a typical Greenwich Village bar, with few benches to sit on, candles for mood and part illumination (the bar is very brightly lit up) and various objects de art to gaze at.

The Athens Hilton, of course, adds three bars (the Galaxy Bar is atop the 12-story building) and two nightclubs to the city's list of nighttime diverstissement.

H'wood Fire Guts Polar Palace, Damages Studio

Hollywood, May 21.

Polar Palace, scene of Sonja Henie's first ice show and for many years used for rehearsals and practicing by many of the top stars of the ice, burned to the ground last Thursday (16) in a fire which spread to adjoining Producers Studio.

Roofs and floors of four stages were damaged, which will immediately be reconstructed.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

British comedian Harry Secombe is writing a book about an artist's first week in vaudeville. He has written 30,000 words so far and cracks: "And that, pal, is only the title!"

Veteran Swiss ice comedian Mr. Frick (Werner Groebli) celebrated his 25th year with Shipstads & Johnson "Ice Follies" last week by skating his 9,307th performance at the Portland, Ore., Memorial Coliseum, where the 1963 edition was appearing. He and his retired partner, Frack, joined the icer in St. Paul on May 6, 1938. The comic has been skating as a single for 10 years. Attendance at the Coliseum was above average and far ahead of last year's stand there. "Follies" started a five-week vacation May 13 and reopen in San Francisco June 10. "Ice Follies of 1964" preems in Los Angeles Sept. 5.

Moxie Whitney, director of entertainment for the Canadian National Railways and maestro of Royal York Hotel Orchestra, Toronto, has been pacted by Jolly Joyce Agency for U.S. and European representation in 1963-64.

Joyce agency has also signed Margrite Doral, vocalist with a background in Continental boites. Bobby Kroll is staging and arranging the chirp's act for American showcasing.

British Disk Jockey Buys Suburban Frankfurt Cafe

Frankfurt, May 21.

British disk jockey and singer John Paris, a top performer on West German radio and television is taking over a nightclub called Pferdestall (Horses' Stable) at the suburb of Gravenbruch here. The 300-year-old restaurant and gathering place, built on the ruins of a former stable, was formerly managed by Willi Hoehn whose specialty was singing blue songs. Hoehn is switching to a similar operation in Munich.

Paris, costumed as an English riding master, acts as greeter and entertainer, singing oldies and newies in several languages, with an accent on material that is acceptable to the whole family. Hence, it's now expected that the club will change its character from the type that formerly attracted a nearly all-male audience.

Paris is also continuing his disk jockey shows, with "Platter Plauderie" (Platter Chatter) on the local Frankfurt outlet of the German TV net as a sequel to his eight-year-old "Plater Picnic." He will record the shows that he does from Hamburg so that he can spend as much time as possible at the Pferdestall.

Blackpool's New 900G ABC Theatre to Hype Vaude in British Resort

By GORDON IRVING

Blackpool, Eng., May 21.

Vaude, declining elsewhere in the British Isles, will get a summertime boost in this holiday showbiz town when the new ABC Theatre (formerly the Hippodrome) is opened at a gala performance May 31. Cliff Richard, young English pop singer, tops the layout.

Theatre will provide Blackpool with a modern luxury entertainment centre, built at a cost of $900,000, and seating 2,000. It has been designed to house spectacular live shows and also to present modern forms of screen entertainment.

In "Holiday Carnival," presented by Leslie Grade in association with Associated British Cinemas, Richard will be supported by The Shadows (the usual instrumental group who back him), actress Carole Gray, ventriloquist Arthur Worsley, Dailey & Wayne, Norman Collier, Joan Palethorpe and the Pamela Devis Dancers.

Advance coin is reportedly a heavy, and show is expected to break b.o. records here.

Many reservations have come from overseas customers, including some in Nyasaland, Germany, Sweden, and Reykjavik, Iceland.

Site of the new ABC Theatre has been linked with show biz since 1895. In that year the Empire Theatre was built, serving as a dance centre, music hall and circus before switching its name to the Hippodrome in 1900 and turning to motion pictures in 1910. ABC (London) acquired the Hippodrome in 1929, and operated it as a leading theatre until it was demolished to make way for the new ABC Theatre.

New auditorium has been wired to enable tv programs to be swiftly and easily screened direct from the building. Terry Pace, ABC-tv's Manchester studio manager, told VARIETY: "It will enable our outside broadcast units to drive up to the theatre, install cameras and other equipment, and literally plug in."

We of the BETTER BOYS FOUNDATION, a Chicago agency combatting gang-type delinquency, want the entertainment world to know these men flew to Chicago at THEIR expense to do a benefit for juvenile gang delinquents . . . All causes are worthy—not all are popular. Prejudice and intolerance sometimes make the difference.

The BETTER BOYS FOUNDATION is grateful to all, but especially to Arthur Godfrey, who flew his own plane and party including Phil Foster, Nipsy Russell and Johnny Parker. Godfrey refused to be compensated or reimbursed! . . . If it is unusual to advertise such acts, then let this be a first. The BETTER BOYS FOUNDATION is grateful and wants you to know of their unselfish deed . . . Our thanks also go to Caroline Richter, Duke Hazlett, and Sergio Franchi for also appearing on our show without compensation while they worked in Chicago.

This ad was paid for personally, and not from benefit funds, by the president and founder of the BETTER BOYS FOUNDATION.

AGVA Seeks to Batten Down Cruise Hatch for Members With Bookers' Aid

The American Guild of Variety Artists met yesterday (Tues.) with cruise ship bookers in an effort to close the field to foreign, amateur and non-union acts which have been getting more cruise work. Union called the meeting in a move to maintain employment for performers on the ships and continue present working standards.

Meeting was set after several lines adopted a practice of putting foreign acts for the various voyages as crew members. Under ship's disclaimer is limited to a few cruise plans, the entertainers could be told to do any number of shows and would be subject only to a crewman's pay, or no pay at all if the performer were signed for passage and board only.

Inking of the non-union performers, but AGVA as well as bookers fear that this practice could grow. Bookers warned the union of this condition some time ago when they raised scales on all cruise ships. They pointed out that entertainment was an extra on these trips and by raising scale the ships could bring in foreign acts.

The bookers asserted that a series of raises by the American Federation of Musicians eliminated nearly all American musicians from the cruise ships. Most tooters working cruise vessels today are picked up in foreign ports and sign on as crew members. AGVA now fears that this condition may hit the performing field as well.

Limited number of cruise bookers in New York makes it fairly easy for the union to control the field for its members. The union-franchised bookers headquartered in New York comprise Eph Abramson of the WOR Artists Bureau; James J. Grady, Lou Lang & Henry Hermann, Charles Ryan and Helen Keating.

More difficult to police are the talent offices based in Miami Beach, which is also a major port for the cruise ships. Deepening of the channel at Ft. Lauderdale will also make that city an important port of call for the vacation voyages.

Buff. Court Reverses Self, Frees Cafe Op He Ruled Guilty on Check Charge

Buffalo, May 21.

In an unprecedented reversal on the part of a City Court judge here, the case of Myron Rose, former operator of the bankrupt and closed Moulin Rouge Supper Club, involving a fraudulent check charge was dismissed after he had been declared guilty two weeks ago following a trial by the same judge.

Rose was discharged when the judge, after reviewing a previously ordered probation report, stated that the report raised questions of doubt as to Rose's intent to defraud Robert A. Moelscher, wholesale meat dealer, to whom the check was given in payment of a bill.

The absence of any prior criminal record on the part of defendant, together with Rose's lawyer's description of him as a respectable restaurant man before he became involved in serious financial difficulties as a result of the Moulin Rouge operation, was also cited in his favor.

Rose and his wife have filed a petition in bankruptcy and a no-contest plea is pending before the State Liquor Authority on a charge of permitting a disorderly performance (Belle Barth) at the Club.

New Columbus, O., Amus. Center May Bring Acts

Columbus, O., May 21.

Amos Lanes, deluxe recreation and entertainment centre, will be the first building in the second phase of construction in the Amos Center, in northeast Columbus. Ground will be broken soon, with completion set for fall. Bands and acts are expected to be booked for the amusement center.

Plans call for a 40-lane bowling establishment, cocktail lounge, banquet room, dining room, nursery, billiard room and snack bar. William H. Hadler is the center's developer. Nat Fast, president of Graceland and Pikeion Lanes, is lessee.

Glasgow Fun Centre

Glasgow, May 21.

A modern entertainment centre is part of the plans for a new island in the Clyde, a $15,000,000 project now being considered by Glasgow Corporation.

A luxury cinema, bowling alley, restaurant and hotel are included. The island would be between Glasgow Bridge and Victoria Bridge.

Mel Baker Joins ITA

Mel Baker has joined International Talent Associates and will head the agency's location department out of its Beverly Hills, Cal., office.

Formerly affiliated with MCA's Coast office for eight years in the same department, Baker was most recently with UTM Artists Ltd. in its Chicago office. Bob Wilding continues as head of ITA's Coast concert department, with Mike Davenport as his assistant and Coast v.p. Ben Shapiro handling tv and special events.

Shakeup at Alpine Village, Cleve., In Owners' Shuffle

Cleveland, May 21.

Changes of policy and stockholders are again rocking the downtown Alpine Village nitery which closed Monday (20) for a new shuffle in ownership.

One of the newcomer backers, reported to have bought out several disgruntled investors, said they will reopen the 800-capacity spot Saturday (25). Breaking away from former format of routine variety revues, they plan weekly stage shows built around names.

Niteries sources are wondering if Nick Pinardo and Manus McCafferty, who have been bidding for a major chunk of stock in the Alpine Village, was their objective. Pinardo, who recently sold his Chateau Supper Club in nearby Lakewood, and McCafferty, who formerly operated the Top Of the Hanger Club, teamed up recently in looking for a choice new nitery site.

They bid for the restaurant concession in the city-owned downtown Burke Airport, with idea of running a deluxe supper club with name acts. On paper it looked like a good idea, but promoters were turned down by city fathers after a controversy.

Alpine Village shakeup also shook Herman Pirchner out of his job as "consultant director" when his contract with former stockholders ended this week.

Pirchner, who founded and once operated this restaurant-theatre, said he may take an out-of-town post or "perhaps open a small nitery of my own in Cleveland." Whitey Roberts, juggling comedian, and singer Jacqueline Conrad were final acts in show last week before the Alpine shuttered for reorganization.

FRIENDS OF ART PLOT MELANGE-AT-LAKESIDE

Milwaukee, May 21.

A festival of art, including paintings, music, drama and old flickers, will be held here July 13 at the lake front War Memorial Center, sponsored by the center's Friends of Art.

More than 100 Wisconsin artists will be represented with their exhibits of paintings, sculpture and crafts. Available for purchase natch.

There will be a dramatic show for children in a tent, and the local drama group, the Elm Grove Players, are scheduled to present a scene from their summer musical, "Fanny."

Music will include barbershop and folk singing, a chamber group from the Milwaukee Symphony, a jazz group and a light opera concert by Raquel Montalvo.

Token admission will be charged, with proceeds going to the participating artists and the Friends of Art.

Malayan Govt. Calls Off Hilton Project

Kuala Lumpur, May 14.

The Malayan government has called off a proposal by the Hilton Hotels International of America to establish a $5,000,000 hotel here with government participation. The Minister of Commerce and Industry has written Hilton saying it is anti-Malayan government policy to enter business.

Hilton last year invited the Malayan government to join the project, leaving it to fix the proportion of capital needed locally. At the moment there are only two major hotels here, the Merlin and the Federal.

Pact Mathis, Auto Thrill Show at Ohio State Fair; 'Beverly Hillbillies' Deal Fizzes

Columbus, O., May 21.

Singer Johnny Mathis and the Detroit Auto Thrill Show have been booked to appear at the Ohio State Fair starting Aug. 24. Manager E. J. Keirns said he had been unable to sign the "Beverly Hillbillies" on a percentage basis. He noted that negotiations to get Vince Edwards (Dr. Ben Casey) were halted when Edwards asked for a $16,000 guarantee.

Keirns said he still is angling for Roy Rogers, who has made no decision whether to hit the fair circuit this year. He's also dickering for "The Real McCoys" and Lawrence Welk.

Arthur M. Mitner, of Leesburg, was named chairman of the Ohio Expositions Commission, succeeding James Myslop, who resigned last month. Robert M. Ward of Urbana, was chosen vice chairman. The commission has overall direction of the fair. The commission rescinded an agreement with the public relations firm of Nicholas Pope and hired Harry M. Miller Inc., of Columbus, to handle fair publicity.

'62 Eastern N.M. State Fair Grossed 75G; N.C. State Fair Nets $67,244

Albuquerque, May 21.

The 1962 Eastern New Mexico State Fair at Roswell grossed $75,000, it was reported by fair officials last week. Exposition has no official sanction from the state, and runs immediately following the annual New Mexico State Fair, held in Albuquerque in September.

Gross represents revenues from 1962 seven-day show and rentals and revenues from other sources during the year. Greatest single sources of income came from percentage of midway concession, $21,400—and $25,300 from gate admission. Some 60,000 persons were clocked through gates during 1962 show.

N. C. Doubles '61 Net

Raleigh, N. C., May 21.

The N. C. State Fair made more than twice as much money last year compared with the year before, according to a report released by State Auditor Henry L. Bridges. The report shows that profits of the fair totaled $67,244 last year, compared with $32,903 in 1961.

The fair had total revenues of $466,979 and expenditures of $399,735. Nearly $30,000 of the profit was spent on permanent improvements to the fair grounds.

N. C. Trade Fair's Gain

Charlotte, N. C., May 21.

Officials of the second North Carolina International Trade Fair estimated that 120,000 persons attended the exposition during its eight-day run that ended last week. The 1961 fair drew 110,000 persons.

Expansion of Toronto Gardens Faces Snags

Toronto, May 21.

Because there are some 9,000 applications on the mailing list for seasonal hockey tickets, Maple Leaf Gardens plans an immediate $2,000,000 expansion of 4,030 seats which would bring its capacity to 16,400. It would also increase the available seats for stage attractions and ice shows.

Plans of architect F. A. Allward provide for 2,040 seats at south end and 1,990 seats at north end, these to be newly-constructed balconies, the first to be built at the Gardens. But John Deacon of the city solicitor's department says Toronto has no power to grant the necessary encroachments over the sidewalks or the air space above them and claims that this is prohibited by Ontario legislation.

Harold Ballard, veepee of Maple Leaf Gardens, said construction, if started immediately, would be completed for this year's opening of the hockey season. But Douglas Ford, works commissioner, ruled that the project would have to go to the building and development committee.

MILES INGALLS JOINING COAST DUGAN AGENCY

Miles Ingalls, a veteran New York agent, is closing shop as of June 1 to migrate to the Coast to join the Johnny Dugan Agency. Ingalls' entry into the Dugan office marks a reunion after 20 years when both were with the now defunct MCA talent agency.

Ingalls, who has been an indie since leaving MCA, is being partied by a group of agents at Steuben's Restaurant, N.Y., Monday (27). The farewell is sponsored by a group of fellow independents headed by Eddie Elkort, who is president of Artists Representatives Assn. Also on the committee are Lee Cohen, purchasing agent for Loew's, and agents Benny Kuchuk and Joe Flaum.

JOHN HAMMOND
Blues
20 Mins.
Gaslight, N.Y.

With an harmonica fixed before his mouth via a neckbrace and a guitar in the traditional position, bluesinger, John Hammond is presently delighting folk-blues buffs at the Gaslight, N.Y., with his authentic vocal and instrumental stylings. The son and namesake of Columbia Records talent exec John Hammond, the young singer-musician projects his material in a manner that pleases both the ethnics and less hip alike.

Appropriately rough around the performing edges, Hammond thumps his foot through every number, sometimes distracting from the effectiveness of a particular tune when the mike picks up the noise and also when tempo of his foot doesn't jibe with that of his harmonica or guitar. But his overall impression is an effective one throughout his turn.

Better at slower, talking blues numbers than the rollicking up-tempo variety which sometimes seem to get away from him, Hammond puts lotsa feeling into his singing, telling the stories with emotional strength and involvement. His guitar playing is also dramatic and skillfully correct and his harmonica work, using a variety of instruments which he clips in and out of his special brace, likewise is loaded with vitality and expression.

He's an effective performer who should do well in spots similiar to the effective intimate coffeehouse setting of the Gaslight, a Greenwich Village folk-blues showcase which has given birth to several top performers in this idiom. The Gaslight is no kin to the Gaslight (Key) Club. Kalt.

SUZANNE LAKE
Songs
30 Mins.
Black Knight, Toronto

Prior to leaving for an engagement in London toward early part of June, Suzanne Lake is breaking in a new act at the Black Knight Room of the Royal York Hotel. Last time she was in Toronto was at the O'Keefe Centre as a principal singer in the national company of "Flower Drum Song."

Arrangements for forthcoming London appearance are all by Harry Cohen. Miss Lake stayed on some 30 minutes—when caught—in her twice-nightly song sessions at the 125-capacity Black Knight Room, which was packed with enthusiastic customers.

Though having a song repertory in six languages, Miss Lake wisely confines the lyrics to English and French in her Toronto break-in. Poured into a white satin sheath, brunet soprano opens with an operatic "Song in My Heart," segues into "Man I Love," a spirited "Enjoy Being a Girl," which was one of her "Drum" hits, a dramatic "What Kind of Fool Am I" and "Fly Me to the Moon," a bouncy "Tzena," with a hegoff of a further medley of R&H songs.

Sticking mainly to Broadway pops, Miss Lake held those high notes where delivery warranted and demonstrated that acting ability in understanding what all the lyrics were about. She exhibited stage presence, charm and exquisite grooming; above all, she was in enchanting voice, with galvanic personality showing through. McStay.

SYLVIA DILLON
Songs
25 Mins.
Rendezvous Room, L. A.

Sylvia Dillon, while not indicating strong potential for major spots, has the proper training, sufficient vocal capacity and showmanship savvy to suggest continuing work in most smaller niteries throughout the country.

In many respects a cut above average, singer particularly scores on nicely balladed "If Love Were All." On little known "Funeral Blues," however, she shows her vocal limitations, depending far too much on bluesy sound without projecting a proper perception of what the music is meant to be.

"Mack the Knife" is a particularly solid piece of material in German portions and would be a highlight if kept in this language instead of going into English. Singer has prepared well, has good stage presence. She needs to gown for more simplicity. Dale.

JUDI LAWLER
Songs
20 Mins.
Dino's Lodge, Los Angeles

Twentyfour-year-old Judi Lawler has been singing since she was three, professionally for the past 10 years, and it shows. The blonde, blue-eyed native of San Diego, is making her nitery debut here as a soloist after a 16-month band canary hitch at the Hotel del Coronado during which she was spotted by actor Robert Strauss who paved the way for a Dino's audition. She is a cut above the average warbler who works this spot and, with a few breaks along the way, could become a bigtime singer.

Miss Lawler has the raw material, the confidence, the enthusiasm for her work, the lyric-dramatic sense and the performing aplomb to make the grade. Development of a shade more individualism of style now separates her from a higher rung on the nitery ladder, but this should come with exposure and more solo experience. The singer plans to return to the del Coronado unless somethings opens up for her in L.A. It should, and chances are it will.

It's a tribute to Miss Lawler's vocal verve and natural performing finesse that the ordinarily unresponsive Dino's patrons pay pr close attention to her work. S.. operates in a relaxed, but magnetic, fashion that keeps the listener interested in the lyric and the musical phrase. Her choice of material is refreshing, too. Saving the best for last, she follows four rather conventional numbers with two not oft-heard refrains and concludes with a first-class rendition of the melodically tricky "When The Sun Comes Out." Those two unorthodox ditties are the lyrically witty "To Keep My Love Alive" from "Connecticut Yankee," and "Thanks To You," on which Miss Lawler skillfully utilizes throaty tones reminiscent of the June Christy manner.

Flawlessly and imaginatively backstopping, as usual, are pianist Jack Elton and bassist Steve LaFever, two of the best friends a budding singer ever had. This budding singer is in for two weeks. Tuve.

PIERRE LE BON
Songs
10 Mins.
Latin Quarter, N. Y.

Pierre Le Bon, who takes over the major vocal spot in the Latin Quarter show, seems hemmed in with his current situation. Like most Continental styled singers, he shows the need of developing and working at his own pace. Unfortunately, there isn't that kind of time for him in this lengthy floorshow and he has to come off before he can build to his proper climax.

Le Bon works rapidly, shifting from French to English translations. All his numbers are familiar, but his metier of operation isn't in the groove of U. S. audiences. His style is in the manner of an American trying to impersonate a Frenchman and he moves so rapidly that he doesn't seem to have the time to get together with his audience on a common plane. He needs to redesign his routine. Jose.

DIANA DAVIS
Songs
25 Mins.
Gatineau, Ottawa

Diana Davis is an addition to the ranks of effervescent blond canaries. She has nice pipes, is a neatly stacked looker but still new in the chirp business and needing more solid backing, arrangements and staging savvy.

Gab bits also need strengthening but with her current attention to these items and more experience and training, pert Miss Davis will be okay for niteries, lounges, video, AM. Gerun.

ARTHUR ROSS JONES
Songs
20 Mins.
Rendezvous Room, L. A.

Arthur Ross Jones appears more concerned with big sound than with communication. His training is obviously operatic, but it is not correct. Voice placement is in his throat and pushed to a nasal quality that gives it a hard, strident, often tight sound.

It is a big, powerful voice — one that could be superb — and he uses it with dramatic flair. Too much so. In pushing for sound, he forgets attention to lyrics. Only on softly delivered "Language of Love" does he begin to show a perceptive rapport between music and words. This is an area that should be more strongly developed.

Jones works more comfortably in operatic arias, but these are not the material for a nitery floor. He will have reevaluate his act if he wishes to make any go of it in the pop singing medium. Dale.

RON & JOY HOLIDAY
Dance
9 Mins.
Latin Quarter, N. Y.

Ron & Joy Holiday combine ballroom and adagio with the addition of working in silvered bodies a la the posing acts. This duo from England are skilled dancers. They show some fast tricks as well as good straight dance passages.

The Holidays offer a lot for a wide variety of cafes. They seem to be able to get along without the added novelty of the painted torsos. Their work is more leisurely than most of the adagio practitioners. There are some passages that can be speeded up, and a little editing to tighten their act would give it a more upbeat pace. Jose.

Cafe Inflation

in Casino to New York, the Manhattan spots would be able to take advantage of the situation by luring names simply because they were in the neighborhood. However, this hasn't been the case at all. Many headliners who play the Latin Casino continue to bypass the Gotham clubs.

The Americana is the salary leader in the hotel field. Customarily, hotels pay less for comparable talent than niteries do. However, the Americana after a disastrous start due to the poor design of its room, is now luring talent with top prices. Eddie Fisher is set for June 11 at a $12,500.

Whether high stipends will be a permanent condition at the Americana isn't known as yet. But the feeling is that the hotel will have to continue in that vein for top names, otherwise they will go elsewhere. As yet, the Americana's Royal Box is still an unknown and unseasoned entity, therefore the higher price label is mandatory at this point.

Some Like It Moderate

The Waldorf-Astoria and the Persian Room are continuing a moderate priced policy. While there is no ceiling at either hotel, they have been getting talent with a price tag considerably below five figures. The majority of the acts come in at around $3,500, with many eager for the showcasing purchased for less.

The Latin Quarter has also been shopping for names, and while the Copacabana has been getting its topliners at reasonable prices, the inflationary factors may soon be too much and they could be paying considerably more. The International offered a kingsized sum for Marlene Dietrich and so has the Americana. However, Miss Dietrich bypassed both spots for this season anyway.

At any rate, the agencies have the feeling that a breach in pay ceilings is imminent. They're not particularly happy about it at this time because of the economic squeeze on cafes in the face of generally dwindling business.

of bourbon-dispensing clubs that are mushrooming here. With the increasing growth of the West German economy, young people who were once lucky to be able to pay for a 15c beer or a quarter glass of wine, are aping the Americans as they swing their tastes to the buck-a-shot imported bourbon and Scotch.

Among the new intimate clubs that have popped up recently in Frankfurt are the Bourbon Club, with an old Southern atmosphere; the Black and White Club, furnished like an English tavern, and the Old Fashioned intimate bar and restaurant furnished in cozy old style featuring Swiss cooking to back up the American bourbon and Scotch Scotch.

House Reviews

Music Hall, N.Y.

The Envoys (4), Lisa Di Julio, Music Hall Rockettes (36), The Spencers (3), Music Hall Symphony Orch with Shura Devorine; "Spencer's Mountain" (WB), reviewed in VARIETY Feb. 27, '63.

Difficult as it is to conceive, the Music Hall stage show is underrehearsed this time around. And as for conception, it isn't one of the house's more inspiring ones.

The orchestral overture, in the traditional saccharinely satisfying music, consists of a Tschaikovsky medley. But the horn section is dissonant and the violins unrefined in the thick feedback of the loud speaking system.

A quartet of males, billed as the Envoys, are a sharp disappointment. The lead tenor sometimes is offkey. Indeed, the general level of the group's harmonies is far below that usually displayed by the highly trained personnel of the Music Hall.

A composition by Shura Devorine, at the piano, is danced to by the MH ballet company. While hardly inspired, the piece is pleasant. But where the music this time keeps up to standard, the ballet accompanying it does not. This, too, is unusual. Conrad Ludlow and Judith Panzer are billed as the feature dancers, yet their performance is anything but dazzling. His particularly is poor.

Miss Lisa Di Julio bends from the waist in her two-color evening dress so that, unfortunately, from the MH mezzanine, she looks misshapen as she sings. She seems to be a mezzo-soprano, most of the time, that is. Perhaps, she too suffers from lack of proper rehearsal.

The Spencers, a strongarm threesome from abroad, do however meet the high standards of the MH. There have been better acrobats, for certain, but nevertheless the trio performs skillfully and to the satisfaction (for the first time in the evening) of the aud.

Russell Markert prepared another turn for the Rockettes, who, poorly rehearsed or no, seem incapable of doing serious wrong. Their stuff is a standard concoction, but the execution is tremendously pleasing. Art.

Apollo, N. Y.

John Lewis presents his "Free Sounds of '63," with Julian Cannonball Adderley, Sonny Rollins, Oscar Brown Jr., Ramsey Lewis Trio, Tommy Jensen Dancers (3); "No Man Is an Island" (C).

John Lewis is freedom in his jazz package, "Free Sounds of 63," at the Apollo this week. He's scheduled to move from the Harlem house to the Howard in Washington and then to the Uptown in Philadelphia. With a little better organization than was evidenced at the initial Apollo performance last Friday afternoon (17), the show should merit the approval of the audiences at the theatres for which it's booked.

The Julian Cannonball Adderley Sextet and the Ramsey Lewis Trio provide some straight musicalizing with interesting arrangements. Folksinger Oscar Brown Jr. does a fine job on two vocals. His offerings run the gamut from a humorous "I'm Cool" number to a serious slave auction item which he's written for projected musical, titled "Slave Story."

Songstress Nancy Wilson got off to a bad start with a mike mishap on her "Guess Who I Saw Today" number, but she fared much better in a song session near the end of the 92-minute offering. The Tommy Jonsen terp trio, two gals and Jensen, demonstrate some torrid torso twisting in a frantic "Primative" offering.

The disorganization of the preem performance was such that the stage was left empty for about a minute on two occasions when there was a changeover of acts. The snags are presumably being ironed out and the show may also benefit if cut down somewhat. Jess.

Unit Review

Russ Conway Show
(KING'S, GLASGOW)

Richard Armitage (for Noel Gay Productions) presentation of "The Russ Conway Show" Stars Russ Conway; features Mike & Bernie Winters, Bryan Johnson, Peter Crawford Trio, Tricia Marks, The Showmaidens (8), Orch conducted by Conrad.

English pianist, Russ Conway, has a way with the gentler sex, and scores solidly here via a charming and hesitant style of presentation. Good-looking musicians, with strong marquee value, largely through best-selling disks, offers entertaining session of favorite tunes, and exits to solid palming.

His repertoire includes the Auld Lang Syne classic, "Skye Boat Song," and he also sings "Danny Boy." Conway adopts the humble approach throughout, but is apt to overdo the use of the phrase "Ta" (Thanks) after each number. He winds with a sentimental monolog to his own recording.

Remainder of layout is slender, although presented against bright and colorful settings, giving the production a veneer of sophistication.

Mike & Bernie Winters are a goofy comedy duo, but spoil themselves by appearing too frequently and also by using fun-fodder they've employed for years. The toothy member of the twosome is especially amusing when he tackles the drums.

The Peter Crawford Trio musical combo, have a strong attack and win many friends among the outfronters. Bryan Johnson offers songs in good voice, but must guard against a too-English and stilted manner of gabbing between between tunes.

Tricia Marks is a spirited warbler and the Showmaidens work effectively as a dancing line. Paul Conrad batons the orch. Choreography is by Maggy Maxwell, the entire show being produced for tour by John Lyndon.

It was caught at the plush King's Theatre here, normally used for big musicals or legit shows) when presented in twice-nightly form. It tours other U.K. cities later. Gord.

One-Man Show

Lenny Bruce

Los Angeles, May 16.

Le Grand Theatre presentation of one-man show by Lenny Bruce. Opened first week engagement May 15, '63 at Le Grand Theatre, $3.50 top.

Controversial comic crusader Lenny Bruce has a lot to say, but his way of saying it has succeeded in alienating that very segment of the population he's trying to reach. As a result, most of those who come to his one-man show in the course of its current five-week run at the Le Grand are apt to be either in accord with his sociological points-of-view in the first place or coming for the wrong reasons — namely to tune in on a risque four-letter wavelength.

Beneath all the scatological sludge and erotic distortion on the crust of Bruce's act lurks some penetrating observation that, when occasionally it surfaces and crosses communication lines, rewards the listener with some fresh, vital and interesting slants on some of the major hypocrisies and absurdities of contemporary living, which Bruce is out to puncture.

Trouble is that Bruce's style is generally too elusive and incoherent to register with any consistency or generate comic momentum. And, worse yet, the "open end" freedom of this less restricted semi-legit environment causes him to ramble on for two hours, which is about an hour too long to support his kind of humor. Even the three vice squadders who attended his opening night performance probably were hard put to keep their mind on the job along about the tail end of the act.

Some swear by him, some at him. If nothing else, that kind of reaction indicates that Lenny Bruce should be regarded that he belongs in bars not behind them. Tube.

Franz Benteler's firstrate house orch, although ordinarily Continental styled, supports Miss Miller with a sturdy jazz beat, and serves up a classy terp beat between shows. Bonaparte Room drops entertainment for the summer following Miss Miller's engagement, but the Benteler unit stays on. Mor.

On the minus side there's the routine of the German officer which gets varied reaction, first, because there are those who still can't see anything funny in a German bully, and second because the guttural commands hurled at certain members of the audience frequently leaves them stunned, confused and embarrassed. As for Miss Forrest, she's a delightful performer and her operatic routine with Tannen—which they did with marked success on the Jackie Gleason tver—comes off in whom fashion, Tannen and Miss Forrest complement each other perfectly.

Miss Forrest delivers with a strong lyric soprano voice, and on her own comes over well with items like "Autumn Leaves," a medley about Paris, "Love Is a Many Splendored Thing," segueing from a far too-short Madame Butterfly opening. She is also a looker and impeccably coiffed and gowned.

Denny Vaughan's band still is about tops in town both for show-cutting and dancing. Lase.

Basin St. East, N. Y.

Benny Goodman Sextet, Barbra Streisand, Bernard Peiffer Duo; $3.50 music charge.

The juxtaposition of the music/record biz's old (Benny Goodman) and new (Barbra Streisand) is a happy event for the Basin Street buffs. The vet clarinetist still commands staunch audience support here and the young songstress is emerging from the intimery circuit into the big-room orbit via her click debut LP for Columbia, so there should be plenty of action at the ropes until June 3 when a new layout comes in.

Goodman is playing it safe this round. Most of the repertoire has been identified with him over the long span of his tootling career so when he blows into the opening strains of such as "Avalon," "Don't Be That Way," "Rachel's Dream," etc., the audience response is immediate and affectionate. His clarinetting is smooth and lyrical and is especially effective on a whip-through of a delightfully fashioned Rodgers & Hart medley.

His sextet this trip is made up of topnotchers: Bobby Hackett (trumpet), Tyree Glenn (vibes and trombone), Modesto Briseno (tenor sax and flute), John Bunch (piano), Jimmy Rowser (bass) and Ray Mosca (drums). They all fit into the easy glide Goodman has designed for this outing and Hackett and Glenn are standout when they hold the spotlight for some solo rides.

The sextet also fits the bill in its double duty role of musical support for Miss Streisand. (Her own pianist, Peter Daniels, helps out a lot here, too.) She's a potent belter with a load of style. Her dramatics are quite effective and separate her from the run-of-the-mill singer making the rounds today but there's a need for more of let-up in her turn that runs over 35 minutes.

The big ballad sameness of most of Miss Streisand's songbag in the opening show would indicate a one-note range which ain't so. She has indicated in previous Gotham showcasings (Bon Soir, Blue Angel) that she's as dynamic with the light special material and bright rhythm numbers as she is with the highly-charged ballad. Some of it was shown during the opening set but not enough.

She's an exciting young performer, though, and her show biz potential, in all media is immense. Her new Kenneth-coiff is a help but the Empire-styled dress still doesn't suit her frame.

Bernard Peiffer marks his return to the jazz-room scene in this gig. In this new setup with a bass assist, Peiffer's keyboarding gets a dramatic showcasing and should open new doors for his work. And it rates more than just the All-in kind of assignment which he gets here. Gros.

Troubadour, L. A.

Los Angeles, May 15.

Bob Gibson, Hoyt Axton, The Sherwood Singers (3), Dave Jackson; $2 admission, one item minimum.

Although completely different in styles, Bob Gibson and Hoyt Axton, who headline the current program at Doug Weston's kaffeehaus, provide a generally solid bill, lessened only by a hint of pseudo-sophistication that too many turned-professional folksingers have acquired of late.

A well-intended attempt to bridge the gap between the fervent but fundless followers who gave many of these artists their first push and the better-financed, but more demanding, nitery regulars, sometimes cheats both listeners and artists. Performers frequently tend to wander away from the authentic beginnings of their interest in folk songs, adding trick arrangements and special material that, more often than not, has no place in their repertoires.

They eventually wind up with a slick mixture of folk tunes, both authentic and faked, pop numbers, and poorly-advised parodies. Too often these are accompanied by a growing disdain for their audiences.

While both Gibson and Axton still convey sufficient excellence to underscore their current status as performers, both are beginning to allow a bit of this sense of disorder to creep into their acts.

Gibson betrays his excellent voice when he bowdlerizes "Sweet Betsy From Pike," tosses around some tired commentary on Liz Taylor-Richard Burton, or takes unwarranted liberties with "Frankie and Johnny." He recovers much of his presence, fortunately, when, to his own superb guitar accompaniment, he sings a brooding number about a townerier kneiling the passing hours.

Axton, no stranger to the Troubadour, may be taking his audience too much for granted. His patter is weak and ineffectual and indicates that he's not too concerned with his listeners' pleasure. Despite his very evident personality, a misguided feeling of insolence creeps into his comments.

Even singing, and he sings beautifully, Axton intentionally strains the endurance of both the microphone and the ears of the audience with some bellowing roars that should be dropped. The virility and latent power that are apparent, even in such a banal item as "Grizzly Bear," are too valuable to waste in this manner.

Bridging the offerings of the two soloists, the Sherwood Singers (two boys and a girl) offer a short but tuneful program, highlighted by a moving "Midnight Train." Bass player Dave Jackson supports the Sherwoods as well as Gibson.

Bill is in through June 2. Josh White opens June 4. Robe.

Holiday House, Milw.

Milwaukee, May 12.

Tommy Sands, Ben Baldwin Orch (12); $2.50 cover, no minimum.

Tommy Sands is making a conscious effort to take along his teenage fans of five years ago into their mutual maturity with an even tempered, relaxed performance with no finger snapping or comedy—just singing.

And the fans, especially the femmes, seem to be going along. On opening night, before a full 8:30 p.m. supper show crowd, the audience was heavily populated with young women who probably were wearing bobby socks and buying Sands singles not so many years ago.

His repertoire mostly comprises sentimental ballads, such as "I Concentrate on You," "Embraceable You" and "Come Rain or Come Shine." His "baby" medley, with "Walking My Baby Back Home" and "My Baby Just Cares for Me," was particularly well received by the Mothers' day audience, especially when he included one for his "baby," "Nancy."

Sands brings father-in-law Frank Sinatra into the act by saying he'd like to sing his (Sands') latest hit record, but unfortunately didn't have one, so he did Sinatra's current "Call Me Irresponsible."

Solid arrangements are well hatched by arranger-conductor Mickey Leonard. And Sands showed he can handle ringside hecklers with ease, inviting the loud requester of "some Italian tune" to show up at a later all-Italian night.

Next on boniface John Volpe's schedule is George Shearing, bringing to Milwaukee its first jazz club show in many months, then Jackie Mason. Dool.

Saddle & Sirloin, Tucson

Tucson, May 16.

The Brothers Castro (4), Ken Jennings Quartet; no cover, no minimum.

Making their Tucson nitery debut at Jim Sfarnas' Saddle & Sirloin, the Brothers Four, out of Mexico City, found the usual noisy dinner crowd for their opening show.

The rudeness continued even after the brothers, George, Xavier, Walter and Arturo, announced their fourth number, "Exodus." But after the patrons heard the pure, clear harmony blend of this arrangement, the audience was silent for the remainder of the show, except for the thunderous mutting that followed every number.

These talented young lads utilize piano, bass, bongo and conga drums, with pianist Arturo doubling on Flamenco guitar in near-virtuoso style. Their "big one" is "Granada," with George initiating the singing with the solo role, in a fine, clear and strong voice. Then brother Walter takes over the vocal chore and comes in just as strong.

The boys interchange vocal solos and drums in other numbers. Singing both in Spanish and English, the group has a good pace, modern arrangements and savvy to please both the oldtimers and the younger set.

The Brothers Castro play the Saddle through May 22, to be followed by Eddie Domingo and the Magnificent Six. Alex.

Roundtable, N. Y.

"Four Faces East," with Carl Esser, Bob Shane, Fiddle Viracola, Phoebe Wray; $3.50 minimum.

The eastside Roundtable, which is currently featuring a belly dance show as its main lure, has added an intimate revue to entertainment presented in its King Arthur Room, a kind of Upstairs at the Roundtable intimate setting. This show, tagged "Four Faces East," features Carl Esser, Bob Shane, Fiddle Viracola and Phoebe Wray in an assortment of tunes and blackouts which register weakly at best.

The material derives from a variety of sources and Miss Wray, with Arthur Blake, has written several of the pieces in the quickie show which runs under an hour. This material, as much of the rest, scores with mixed effectiveness and, to make matters worse, Miss Wray was stricken with laryngitis for the opening show Thursday (16). Others in the cast, although earnest in their efforts, offer little excitement and are handicapped by the songs and skits, most of which lack punch and wit.

The show's major problem is that it has too many loose ends. It is neither topical nor sophisticated nor satirical, although it has elements of each of these aspects. Neither the cast nor the bits themselves do much to crystallize a point of view or a mood. The result is an uneven and dull affair which offers little for the intime revue audience, at which it seems aimed.

Miss Wray has a good many of the tougher pieces to deal with, including at least two songs which require strong vocal prowess to register. Her voice can't be judged due to her sore throat. Miss Viracola gets to be the naughty femme in the show, essaying most of the items that deal with kooky female antics. She's an aggressive performer who scores with mixed results. Both Esser and Shane are agreeable guys who also register mildly.

Alex Palermo's physical staging of the show can't be faulted, as he has used the postage stamp stage effectively. His direction of the performers themselves, however, could be a lot sharper to pinpoint better the thoughts in the material. Clay Roberts' musical direction is oke as interpreted by Bob Hughes at the piano.

In addition to Miss Wray and Blake, items are also contributed by Ronald Axe & Sol Weinstein, Carl Gabler & John Wallowitch, Dee Caruso & Bill Majeski, Theodore James and Robert Hughes & Cy Young.

Show is presented twice nightly, at 10 p.m. and midnight, and bibhits and drinks are available. The room is a pleasant one, set up well for this type of show. All it needs is a stronger, punchier attraction. Kali.

Skippy Reynaud, Larry Quirouette Trio; no cover, no minimum.

By day Le Diplomate, within sight of the parliament buildings in Canada's capital across the river, is a luncheon-dinner posh ery for the striped-pants, gray-flannel and pinstripe sets, at fairly fancy prices. By night it turns into a no-nite nightclub.

Le Diplomate is owned by Philippe St. Cyr, scion of a three-city plumbing and heating contractor, now retired. The son decided there was more money in baths than bathrooms and, flushed with this success, is building a new one outside Hull, to hold 500—more than thrice this one's capacity. The new one will compete with the Gatineau and Chaudiere Clubs in that area.

Headliner here is potential star material—a throaty thrush, shapely and black-haired, tagged Skippy Renaud. Already held over a fortnight, she's in till May 25. Her unusual range permits her to trill the gamut from a sexy growl in "Whatever Lola Wants" through "C'est Magnifique" to "Summertime" and a high-clef "True Love."

She also does reasonably well in Spanish and German, and is admirably backed by Larry Quirouette Trio, which alternates six instruments. Threesome features Walter Munroe, former leader at Gatineau Club, who 88's mostly but does the odd standout sax sell. They also play for dancing, Monday to Saturday, with Miss Renaud in from Thursday on.

Added business comes from the basement Muu Muu Room, where Mrs. St. Cyr presides, a waiter hands out lei and Dorcas Farn (subbing for regular Phil Laham) plays the organ pleasantly. Adjacent is another source of profit, a motel. Gard.

Ritz-Carlton, Mont'l

Montreal, May 17.

Denyse Ange, John Gallant Trio, Paul Notar Trio, $1.50 cover, $2 Sat; no Sunday show.

Denyse Ange is the kind of performer who impresses as though her background, training and talent were designed for the kind of intimate Ritz Cafe entertainment which has become the keynote of this Room. Despite her youthful appearance, she obviously is a singer with plenty of experience in pitching her personality and material for maximum effect.

Putting it a little differently, it all adds up to class, talent, astute choice of her songology, knowing just when to switch from the chanteuse treatment to straight style, and being so well rehearsed that there's hardly a lapse in the pacing or production during the 30-or-so minutes she's on the floor.

Miss Ange uses a velvety contralto set of pipes to soften even the roughest Parisian numbers. She scores with "It Might As Well Be Spring," then moves easily into a melody like "Le Milieu," coming through a few minutes later with "Four People of Paris."

Miss Ange impacts her audience even before she comes up with her first note, with an appearance that is the ultimate in coiffure, and looks that are ultra feminine, pixieish and torchy.

Johnny Gallant at the ivories, and his trio cut the show nicely, with the Paul Notar group filling in on the danseapation.

This may be the last show of the season. Lacy.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, May 14.

Helen Traubel, Don Goldie Orch (5); $2 entertainment charge.

The relationship between Tidelands' patrons and Helen Traubel can be summed up briefly: they dig the diva here.

Perhaps it's because other than for a brief operatic medley, her material is about what you might expect from any other thrush who has outgrown the skating set. But there is a difference. Miss Traubel has perfect control in any range, and even when the decibels are now, not a sound can be heard from a patron.

She opens with "I Could Have Danced All Night" and includes "September Song," "Leg of Mutton Dance," "When I Grow Too Old To Dream," "Stout Hearted Men," "The Nearness of You," "Autumn Leaves," "St. Louis Blues," "Bill Bailey" and others.

For encore, she returns halfway to stage and, standing amid tables and sans mike, bows out with Brahms' "Lullaby."

She's greatly abetted by her conductor, Richmond Gale at 88s, and Don Goldie's trumpet and his band. This is Miss Traubel's second appearance here and she certainly will return if she desires, and she seems to like this room. She's here for a week. Skip.

Drake Hotel, Chi

Chicago, May 14.

Arlene Fontana, Jimmy Blade Orch; $2.50-$3 cover.

Arlene Fontana displays much charm, song salesmanship and a curvy figure in her Camellia House debut. However, her turn appears to be cued to a larger room and had the effect of overwhelming the 'insiders in this moderate size plushery. While it is to large to be considered an intimery, the intimate approach works best in this spot.

Miss Fontana's act has a song-and-dance man theme that has an ingratiating boisterousness about it were it scaled down to size for this outing. Opening "Song and Dance Man" has her stripping from a skirt to Confederate gray tights which are not particularly flattering to her otherwise admirable shape.

Her other turns include "Spanish Town," "Lean on 'The Blues," "Flower Drum Medley" (in which she toured as the femme lead), and a rousing "S Into To Bojangles, Cohan and Durante." This latter terp and chirp take-off tribute to the trio is well staged and carried off with enthusiasm and elan.

Jimmy Blade and his house orch back Miss Fontana with their usual finesse and dish out a topflight terp beat between shows.

Chad Mitchell Trio opens May 28. Mor.

International, N. Y.

"Prom Time USA" with Gene Pitney, Brian Hyland, Clay Cole and holdover "Las Vegas Follies" with Gail Ganley, Phil Black and Richard Ryan, Michael Durso Orch, $7 minimum.

With the annual prom season having rolled around again, Jack Silverman's International has brought in a lineup of teen-oriented performers for a show called "Prom Time USA." The card includes singer Gene Pitney, rocker Brian Hyland and as emcee, deejay Clay Cole. To keep adults accompanying the teeners happy, the main showroom cabaret has also retained "Las Vegas Follies," offering a rather incongruous contrast.

The two shows alternate with song-dance-nucie numbers woven between the teen-aimed performers. Cole keeps the latter segments in line with some ineffectual jokes and some okay warbling of his own. At show caught one of the scheduled performers, Molly Bee, was absent due to illness and Cole presumably was told to pad things out, a move which didn't work out too well, especially in the case of an audience participation bit with Gail Ganley of the "Vegas" show and two male and members.

Cole's warbling of "Put On a Happy Face," "Lucky" and "Got a Lot of Living to Do" is well-handled but his overall handling of the chore is overdone and loose. Miss Bee is expected to join the show when she ankles her California bed. Pitney delivers a solid turn and Hyland registers a weak but teen-drawing session (see New Acts).

Boots McKenna's line is performing smoothly for the "Vegas" segments, with good terping and vocalizing by the unit. Miss Ganley does a fine personable hoofing and singing while Phil Black and Richard Ryan hold down male lead spots with effectiveness. Michael Durso's orch performs with ease and clarity, backing both the "Vegas" and Prom Time outings skillfully. Kali.

Port-o-Call, St. Pete

St. Petersburg, Fla., May 14.

Guy Lombardo & his Royal Canadians (14), Lee Cohen, Joan Fairfax, Miles Ross, Bill Flannigan, Cliff Gross, Nino Nardini, Ed Kretchman & Orch (4); $7.50 minimum.

Lee Cohen the redheaded Texan with a brand of mirth as big and boisterous as his native state, returned to Guy Lombardo's lavish Port-O-Call last Saturday (9). After three months on Florida's east coast, mostly at Lauderdale Beach Hotel, he easily scores with polished routines. "I don't tell new jokes, just refresh your memory."

Touching on television politics and sex in that order but with cleanliness in keeping with Lombardo standards, the comic quickly lassos a willing audience to bring everybody into the act. His renditions on a freakish combination violin-horn register heavily, not with music but with accompanying histrionics. He will accompany Lombardo and the band when they leave for Washington May 22.

Thrush Joan Fairfax has a good legit voice and decorative qualities. Running the gamut from the sublime to the ridiculous is a bit too much versatility for the petite songstress whose real forte appears to be in delivering such smoothies as "You'll Never Walk Alone" and "Days of Wine and Roses."

Rounding out entertainment is Lombardo's "sweetest music" with trio Bill Flannigan, Cliff Grass and Miles Bolt. Bolt, replacement for Lombardo's brother-in-law Kenny Gardner, croons well with the clan.

Nino Nanni, jester of the piano, continues to crowd the adjoining Salon Rouge lounge, spelled by Ed Krachman and Showmen (4). The Los Chavales de Espana and Jimmy Nelson take over the main bandstand May 28, followed by Ralph Flanagan orch June 9.

Village Gate, N. Y.

Jimmy Smith Trio, Valentine Pringle, Lightnin' Hopkins; $2.00 admission.

Powerful jazz organist Jimmy Smith is blasting in Art D'Lugoff's Village Gate on the crest of an album chart hit, "Hobo Flats" (Verve), and his booming style fills this big cellar and then some.

A moderate modern in the jazz idiom, Smith's book alternates between jumpers and standards with a lot of hip embellishments throughout. With James Quentin Warren soaring on some fine amplified guitar solos and Don Bailey on drums, the trio works in interesting instrumentals on "If I Were a Bell," "Moonlight in Vermont" (git solo), a jazz waltz, "Mack the Knife" and motion picture themes, such as "Walk on the Wild Side," keeping a good balance between modern and commercial.

For good contrast, rest of the bill is folk and blues with soloists Valentine Pringle and Lightnin' Hopkins. Pringle, a 6-4 giant with bass-baritone pipes to match, belts in a highly disciplined manner and is strong enough to carry with or without a mike. He rolls out spirituals, Negro folk and love laments, with an affecting "Alberta" top of the catalog. "John Henry," natch, is a capper, but the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," as originated by the Arkansas Yankee Negro regiment (with their lyrics) is a stirring instruction to the audience.

In a return, Lightnin' Hopkins is one of the best primitive blues singers around. He's for real, as they say, and the genuine set is backed by his own fine piney woods guitar stylings. A turn for the blues buffs.

Shamrock, Houston

Houston, May 17.

Rosemary Clooney, K Bert Sloan Dick Krueger Orch (12); no cover or minimum.

The Shamrock Hilton's Continental Room dance floor is now postage stamp size, meaning more tables have been put in. While there will be less dancing the next two frames, the listening will be good, for Rosemary Clooney has the pipes and faultless presentation, and she's a well-rounded entertainer in every sense.

She's on for 45 minutes, and patter, while plentiful, is never boring and helps establish rapport early. She does couple of medleys—the distant tunes that first put her in big time, and songs Bing Crosby popularized—and there is clever intro to "There's Nothing Like a Dame."

Opener is "Lady is a Tramp." In between unusual but effective hegoff, "Mickey Mouse," she has such numbers as "Tenderly," "Show Me," "Sleepy Time Gal," "Get Me To The Church" and "Sophisticated Lady."

Sloan-Krueger Orch, directed by Miss Clooney's musical conductor, Paul Moer, does bangup backing job for thrush.

Show plays two weeks with Anita Bryant in next.

Nugget, Sparks, Nev.

Sparks, Nev., May 14.

Gogi Grant, Jerry Van Dyke, George Arnold Singers and Dancers (15), Foster Edwards Orch (10); no cover, no minimum, second show.

Gogi Grant has played the Reno-Sparks-Lake Tahoe area numerous times during the last decade, but never has she showcased her talents more beautifully than in this second outing as headliner of the Sparks Nugget International Follies. She comes in for this edition with new songs, new material scripted especially for her, but with the same vocal authority she's proved in prior local dates.

Special material for this show (credited to Sid Miller and Sid Kuller) touches on brilliance, and the impressive musical score and arrangements rate the superlatives for Al Pellegrini, singer's conductor and arranger.

First suggestion of the new look to Miss Grant's act comes with her opener, a special lyric effort to "Why Must I Open with an Opening Song." It's a perfect vehicle allowing the petite, and smartly gowned, songstress to essay a brief medley of familiar titles. She shows her full talent and command of vocal nuances with an intriguing interpretation of "Melancholy Baby," done with sensitivity and dramatic consciousness. She's at home in all registers, and the soulful rendition wins her a near standing ovation.

Miss Grant reprises her trademarked "Wayward Wind" at audience insistence, gives out with "I've Got Your Number" (a natural for a casino date), and adds a new dimension to "What Kind of Fool" before hitting the high point of her 45-minute (on night caught) turn—an extremely clever countdown of famed femmes from Eve to Mrs. JFK. It's built around "I Could Write a Book" and wins top endorsement for presentation and pace, and for inventive verbiage (to familiar tunes) telling the story of each character in sometimes hip, sometimes comedic, always entertaining manner.

Jerry Van Dyke, new to this room and to the area, proves a capable talent in the comedic areas, despite the youth and the limited nitery exposure. Working from step stool, he plunks the banjo and vocalizes (with no serious attempt) such as "Hello Sunshine," "Bill Bailey," and "Bye Bye Blues." But his big score comes with his storytelling and a panto to a radio show on how the Lone Ranger got his name. He works in easy low-key style, but includes much subtlety in the doing. Van Dyke is a potent prediction for nitery headline status. Some of the lines are vintage, but he has a winning and assured way in the telling.

Royal York, Toronto

Toronto, May 14.

"Here's Hawaii," with Mauka, Danny Kaleikini, Lani, Tafili, Ben Kalama & Serenaders (3), Hula Maids (3); Moxie Whitney Royal York Orch (12); $2 cover.

A swift-paced floorshow, which ran 60 minutes when caught, "Here's Hawaii" is in for 16 days (excluding Sundays) and is jamming them into the 450-capacity Imperial Room of the Royal York Hotel.

Decided switch is the appearance of petite and bowing songstress Mauka, who, after a nervous bowlowing series in a Japanese crimson obi, unlimbers with a belting-out style, complete with deep-throated gutturals of a "Mack the Knife" delivery, effectively jolting the now delighted customers and following with a lusty "Bill Bailey."

She's back for a company round-up of dances of the "Gay Twenties," including the Charleston and Black Bottom (minus the kimono), and leaves the patrons limp with her singing and dancing transformation.

The Hula Maids open in bare feet with well-timed gyrations, grass skirt wiggles and torso-tossings, which get things off to a brisk start. Statuesque Lani changes the pace by doing the classical hula to good effect, ably backed by the music of Ben Kalama and the Serenaders (3), Moxie Whitney and his 12-piece band.

This leads to Danny Kaleikini as singing emcee of chants, love duets with Lani of "Marriage in Hawaii" and "Because You Are Here," followed by "I Will Remember," all done in slow tempo and plenty of finger-weaving to island music. Hula Maids and Serenaders further score with an "Hawaiian Seatsmen" (?) fish.

Mauka returns with her style switch and Tafili clicks in his thrilling fire-dance on darkened stage. Whole company is on for furious dance medley, with entire hour adding up to a swift diversity.

This unit from the Hilton Hawaiian Village Hotel, Honolulu, planes after its Royal York engagement for a five-day opening at the Tokyo-Hilton Hotel, then into the Nichigeki Theatre, Tokyo, for extension.

McStay.

Gaslight Cafe, N. Y.

Len Chandler, John Hammond; $1.50 cover Mon.-Thurs., $2 weekends; no minimum.

Current bill at this Greenwich Village coffee cellar spotlights the diverse talents of two skilled folk-blues interpreters in Len Chandler and John Hammond, the former sticking to a more folk-oriented repertoire while the latter is primarily a country blues singer-musician (see New Acts).

Chandler, who sounds as though he has a strong liking for the work of Josh White, mixes an easy-going personality for lotsa patter with solid musicianship and vocal prowess. He gets a big and varied sound into his interpretations, selling strongly on the up-tempo material and rendering a more delicate feeling when called for. His tune selection has a wide and varied range, and his understanding and feeling for each piece's message make for an entertaining turn.

Accompanying himself on guitar or autoharp, Chandler strongly integrates his playing with his vocal work thereby lending nice emphasis to the selections. His patter between numbers ranges from talk about the tunes to the race situation in the South. Holder of a Masters Degree, he's articulate on the subjects he chooses, mixing in some humor as he goes along.

Red Lion Room, Milw.

Milwaukee, May 10.

Frank D'Rone, with trio; $1.50-$2 cover.

Back on the club circuit after a four month layoff, and this time with a piano-bass-drum trio, Frank D'Rone again shows he has a way with Milwaukee audiences. This is his fifth appearance at the Kaiser Knickerbocker hotel's Red Lion Room, after opening it in July, 1960, and he keeps pulling the customers.

Showing a more relaxed style than in previous appearances, D'Rone has a lively songbag with straight vocals such as "Taste of Honey," with vocal-instrumentals—with electric guitar—on "Lapuna Coal."

His standards include both swing ("Tea for Two") and glide ("When Sunny Gets Blue"). And the customers relax and listen because they can hear his precise enunciation of the lyrics.

New to D'Rone's repertoire is a "Gigi" medley including the title song and "Thank Heaven for Little Girls." He has added two men to his drummer-accompanist, Phil Kelly-Boy Fraser on piano and Dick Bolton on bass, who play between the D'Rone sets.

Interlude, L. A.

Los Angeles, May 11.

"Don Lane Show"; $1.50 cover.

Don Lane works hard, fast and well in an act designed perfectly for jazz lounges and suburban clubs. Performer, who heads a jazz quartet, presents a well rounded show with plenty of variety and lots of entertainment value.

Lane, tall and goodlooking, has an appealing personality and uses it well on nicely-timed comedy. Work also goes into solid jazz vocals—like "Sweet Lorraine" and "Golden Wedding"—and a handful of impressions. Best in show caught was Ed Sullivan.

Lane works essentially as a single, but handles group well throughout. Occasionally, he spars with Mel Bender, assist who adds a slick bit of comedy.

Most of the material is fairly good. As "Candid Camera" skit particularly hits. However, he doesn't need the stuttering jokes which are in bad taste.

Equity and Major Stock Theatres Settle Scales and Pension Setup

Actors Equity and the Council of Stock Theatres have negotiated a new contract covering minimum salaries for a three-year period and graduated pension payments for a four-year span. COST represents the major summer theatres, most of which book touring packages with name talent.

On the contribution to the Equity pension fund, the percentage of the actor's salary to be paid the union is to be 1% with a $700 cutoff in 1963, 2% with a $1,000 cutoff in 1964, 2% with a $1,200 cutoff in 1965 and 3% with a $1,500 cutoff in 1966. The pact also includes expanded hospitalization and medical insurance benefits.

The minimum weekly salary and equivalent rehearsal pay for actors in the "summer theatre" category is to be $92.50 this year, the same next year and $95 in 1965. This compares to a $90.56 minimum last year. In the same category, the minimum for stage managers is to be $140 over the three years covered by the pact, with provision for a cost of living increase. The minimum last year for stage managers was $136.46.

The minimum weekly wage and equivalent rehearsal pay for actors in the "X" category is to be $97.50 this year, $99 in 1964 and $92.50 in '65. This compares to $88.09 last year. In the same category, the minimum for stage managers is to be $120 over the three years covered by the pact, with provision for a cost of living increase. The minimum last year for the stage managers was $111.28. Also in the "X" division, jobbers are to get a minimum of $90 for the first two years of the contract and then $95 in '65. This compares to an $85.09 minimum last year.

For actors working under unit contracts, the minimum for the three-year term of the contract holds at $160 weekly. The minimum for stage managers in this area is to be $145 for the first two years of the pact and then $165 in '65. The unit contract minimum last year was also $160 for actors and $140 for stage managers.

Besides COST, Equity also has summer stock contracts with the Assn. of Civic Musical Theatres, representing the large outdoor operations, as well as with the Council of Resident Stock Theatres, comprising the smaller straw-hatters, and the Musical Arena Theatres Assn., covering canvas-tops.

Tunetent's Preshngent Doubles as Solo Show With Poetry Readings

By D. H. DOOLEY

Milwaukee, May 21.

Sumner Kernan is an ambitious young man who has embarked on a seemingly precarious livelihood. He reads poetry. What's more, he's doing fairly well.

Of course, it may be some time before Kernan is able to make a comfortable living with his reading without working at such jobs as publicity, as he is now for the new Melody Top theatre here. But he is convinced that reading poems to audiences not only is feasible, but is in demand.

Kernan's material is Walt Whitman's writings, which he recites, sometimes alone, sometimes with as many as nine people, including guitar accompanists. Next fall, he hopes to take his show to New York, stage it off-Broadway. He already has one-third of the $15,000 in pledges needed to finance the project.

Kernan came to Milwaukee five years ago from New York to do publicity for the Fred Miller legit theatre. In the spring of 1961, while Will Geer was at the Miller in a repertory company, Kernan produced his first Milwaukee Whitman program. Geer was the reader, and it is Geer whom Kernan wants to take to New York.

The program was a success, was acclaimed in the local press, and it set off Kernan in the poetry business. Since then he has read at colleges, a nurses' school, high schools, for the NAACP at the Wisconsin governor's mansion in Madison. In this last endeavor, as in some earlier ones, he was assisted by Mrs. Vel Phillips, Milwaukee's only woman alderman.

Adapt Schisgal Plays As Berlin Fest Item

Rudolph Stoiber, a United Nations radio-tv correspondent who broadcasts regularly to his native Vienna, has been commissioned to prepare the German-language version of Murray Schisgal's two one-acters, "The Tiger" and "The Typists." The two-character double-bill is currently at the Orpheum Theatre, N.Y., with Eli Wallach and his wife, Anne Jackson, as co-starred.

Stoiber, also a playwright and author, is translating the plays for presentation at this year's Berlin Theatre Festival. His own comedy, "The Germ-Carrier," has been optioned for production in Germany and Abelard-Schuman Ltd. in N.Y. is preparing the publication of his third juve novel, "Henri Dunant: Man in White."

Chi Palace Yens Touring Legiters

Chicago, May 21.

The Palace Theatre, a luxurious 2,400-seat film house which has been dark over a year, has been made available for legit bookings next fall. To facilitate this, owner Arthur Wirtz has taken on Harry Lashinsky and Sidney Piothin, of National Attractions Inc. in Charlotte, West Va., to obtain touring productions for the house.

Wirtz is in Europe, but his Chicago office says he has active interest in the subject and has authorized Lashinsky and Piothin to arrest shows. It's explained, however, that the deal with the pair is not exclusive, does not involve a lease on the theatre, and that Wirtz will have the final say on all terms, negotiations and contracts.

The opening of the Palace to legit would mean another theatre availability in Chi, which has been operating with only two major and two second-string houses for the last season. It would particularly ease the Loop bottleneck for musicals, now limited to the Shubert, which is solidly booked.

The chief handicap to earlier consideration of the Palace for legit bookings has been Wirtz's preoccupation with getting "Cleopatra" for the theatre. He is currently suing 20th Century-Fox and Balaban & Katz in a $1,500,000 triple damage antitrust case, alleging that he bid $9750,000 for the film and B&K got it for the State-Lake for $6500,000. It's understood that Wirtz was so concerned with getting "Cleo" for the Palace that he passed up a bid for "Camelot," which opens Dec. 2 in the Opera House.

The Palace was last used for legit in 1960, with "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." It showed Cinerama firstruns and reruns for the past 10 years until it went dark a year ago when Wirtz and Cinerama failed to come to terms on "The Wonderful World of Brothers Grimm."

Burr to Star in 'Oh Men' In Columbus Stock Week

Columbus, O., May 21.

Raymond Burr will star in "Oh Men, Oh Women" in the Kenley Players summer theatre lineup at Veterans Memorial here the week of June 18. He was originally shedded to star in "Anniversary Waltz."

Gene Hollman, Dick O'Neill, Ron Husman Dulcie Cooper and Michael De Marco inked to appear with Anna Maria Alberghetti in Kenley season opener "Fanny" the week of June 11. Elizabeth Allen has been set for "Show Boat" the week of June 25.

Joe Vion, associate producer has lined up to date 14 major theatre parties, ranging from 500 to 4,000 tickets, during the 14-week season. Charity organizations get duceats at discount and resell at boxoffice rates.

The Playhouse-on-the-Green, a tent strawhatter at suburban Worthington, has substituted Joseph Hays' suspense drama, "Calculated Risk," for "Good Night Ladies" the week of July 29.

Prodigal Returns

Milwaukee, May 21.

"Show business is a lot like drilling oil wells. You take tests and everything else, but you can still drill a dry hole," said Richard C. Carson, new manager of the Pabst legit theatre here.

Carson is from Tulsa, where he promoted shows and was once involved in a losing oil venture. The latter, he said, proved to him he should never again become involved in such "risky" ventures.

Carson made his remarks on arrival here to take over duties at the Pabst, where he hopes to book enough Broadway shows to keep the theatre lighted.

Exchange Lineup Mostly Longhair

Washington, May 21.

The new State Dept. cultural exchange broom has swept into action with the announcement of the full 1963-64 overseas performing schedule. Temporarily shunted in its wake are drama, musical comedy and opera performances.

The new regime, established on the guidelines of an advisory report submitted last winter to the State Dep., has relied heavily on professional and amateur orchestral and singing groups. Lucius D. Battle, Assistant Secretary of State for Educational & Cultural Affairs, said other lines of entertainment were dropped this year because of "language barriers" and production, scenery and transportation expenses. He indicated that solutions to these problems would bring about renewal of exchanges in these fields.

Battle asserted that this is the first time the State Dept. has announced a full season's schedule in advance. Also, for the first time, performing groups were selected with the advice of the reconstituted Advisory Committee on the Arts. This function formerly was handled by the American National Theatre & Academy of New York.

Here's the overseas schedule:

Africa: The Dorian chamber music Quintet of New York visits next fall. In winter of 1964, the Claremont string Quartet of New York will perform.

Far East: Jose Limon and his Dance Company of New York will tour next fall. The Peabody Singers, of George Peabody College for Teachers, Nashville, Tenn., are scheduled for next spring, as is the Univ. of Kansas Brass Choir of Lawrence, Kans.

Near East and South Asia: Duke Ellington and his Orchestra will visit next fall, followed next spring by the Univ. of Maryland Madrigal Singers.

Western Europe: The American Chamber Orchestra of New York, Alfred Wallenstein conducting, will perform next fall. Scheduled next spring are the North Texas State Univ. A Cappella Choir of Denton, and the Univ. of Southern California Chamber Singers of Los Angeles.

Eastern Europe: The Baird Marionettes of New York will perform this summer and the Clarion chamber orchestra Concerts of New York will follow next fall.

Latin America: The Univ. of Illinois Symphony Orchestra is scheduled for the winter of 1964. The Robert Shaw Chorale will tour South America next spring, and the Roger Wagner Chorale will visit Central America at the same time.

Arts of Theatre Award For Playwriting at Yale

The Arts of the Theatre Foundation, established by Edward F. Kook, president of Century Lighting, and his wife Hilda, has set up an annual $1,500 fellowship in playwriting at the Yale drama school. This follows the college's recent announcement of the creation there of an annual $4,800 John Golden Fellowship in Playwriting.

Another $2,000 annual grant, to be known as the John Shubert Memorial Fellowship in Play Directing, has been given to the institution by the Sam S. Shubert Foundation.

Merrick Sets 'Luther' and 'Arturo' Under His Non-Profit Foundation; They Can Retain 10% Admish Tax

David Merrick has arranged to do his scheduled productions of "Luther" and "Arturo Ui" as David Merrick Foundation presentations. Since the Foundation is a non-profit project, the producer figures the shows can operate on a tax-exempt basis, thereby retaining $3,000-$4,000 a week that would normally be paid as 10% admissions levy.

According to Merrick, the Foundation now has about $100,000 funds, representing share of profits from the producer's click presentations of "Gypsy," "La Plume de Ma Tante" and "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off." He figures the two shows, both straight-play imports, can be done for considerably under $100,000 total.

"Luther," the John Osborne drama based on the life of Martin Luther, was a London success last season. Albert Finney will repeat his original title characterization, with Tony Richardson again doing the staging. It's understood the show is booked for a limited engagement at the James Theatre, N. Y., pending the opening of another Merrick show, "Dollie," the musical version of "The Matchmaker."

"Arturo Ui" is a Bertold Brecht drama, adapted by George Tabori, with a Chicago locale and parodying Hitler's career in terms of gangsterism. Alan Schneider will direct.

Other Merrick projects for the season, all to be commercial enterprises, include "The Rehearsal," due Sept. 23 at the Royale; "A Hundred and Ten in the Shade," slated for Oct. 24 at the Broadhurst, and "Solomon and She," aimed for next spring. The producer's current offerings include "Oliver," at the Imperial, N. Y.; "Rattle of a Simple Man," at the Booth, N. Y.; "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off," at the Shubert, N. Y., and the touring edition of "Stop the World," at the Orpheum, Minneapolis.

George Szell Appointed To Gov't Cultural Group

Washington, May 21.

George Szell, musical director of the Cleveland Orchestra and Theodore Roszak, sculptor, have been appointed to the State Dept. Advisory Committee on the Arts. Six other members have already been named to the committee, which recently took over the major role in selecting cultural exchange performers.

The two other appointees to the 10-member group will be disclosed later.

Legit Offbeats For Zurich Fest

Zurich, May 21.

The International June Festival, which originated here in 1939 and became an annual summer event in 1956, will take place May 28-July 3 this year at the Stadttheatre (opera, ballet), the Schauspielhaus (legit) and the Tonhalle (concerts). Four legit productions, 16 operas and two ballet programs will be presented, with a total of 31 performances. In addition, seven symphony concerts are shedded at Tonhalle.

As its own contribution, Schauspielhaus will offer, in German, a 19th century Russian character comedy by Alexander Ostrowskij, "Even the Smartest Can Make A Blunder." It opens June 1, with five repeat performances set throughout June. It was to be staged by a promising young German stage director, Walter Henn, who died suddenly a few weeks ago. The production has been taken over by Rolf Henniger, who also plays the lead. The other principal players are Traute Carlsen, Agnes Fink, Therese Giehse, Ellen Widmann, Peter Arens, Kurt Beck and Wolfgang Reichmann. The sets and costumes have been designed by Toni Businger.

Following its successful "Theatre in Four Languages" cycle, the festival will also present guest troupes from Italy, France and Britain. The Teatro Stabile della Citta di Genova will offer a Carlo Goldoni comedy, "The Venetian Twins," June 4-5, directed by Luigi Squarzina, and the Jean-Louis Barrault and Madeleine Renaud company from Paris will show June 8-10 the French version of Christopher Fry's "Dark Is Light Enough," staged by Barrault, with sets and costumes by Jacques Le Marquet and incidental music by Joseph Kosma. It will be the play's first performance in Zurich. Finally, Britain will be represented June 27-29 by a 17th century comedy by William Wycherley, "The Country Wife," played by the Birmingham Repertory Theatre and directed by John Harrison.

To conclude the lineup, London's Festival Ballet has been inked for four performances, June 28-30.

London 'Steven' to Fold; Due for B'way Next Fall

London, May 21.

"Steven D," the Hugh Leonard drama based on two James Joyce autobiographical novels, closes next Saturday night at the St Martin's Theatre after 118 performances. The Peter Bridge production, presented in association with Peter Katz and Greville Poke, was originally scheduled for an eight-week engagement.

A condensed version of the play will be videotaped by BBC, with the London cast including Norma Rodway in the title role for airing next fall. The drama is due for presentation on Broadway, probably in October, but the theatre and exact date haven't been set.

A carousel will become a permanent feature this summer of the Music Circus, Lambertville, N. J., which opens its season June 1 with "Carousel."

Free Child in Hub Fire; Accuse Actress-Mother In Neglect Complaint

Boston, May 21.

The eight-year-old boy, son of an actress in the road company of "Sound of Music," who was held in connection with the Sherry-Biltmore hotel fire March 28, in which four were killed and 27 injured, was cleared last Thursday (16), Juvenile Court Judge John J Connelly ordered issuance of a complaint, however, against the Austrian-born youngster's mother accusing her of neglect.

Mrs. Evelyn Keller Zach, 41, in the musical which was playing the Colonial theatre at the time, was named in the complaint. She performs under her stage name, Evelyn Keller, and was with the "Sound of Music" road company at the Shubert, Philadelphia, when the boy appeared in court. Judge Connelly also ordered issuance of a petition alleging that the boy is a neglected child. June 6 was set as the date for hearing on both petitions.

The youngster, who was seated in the courtroom with his father, an opera singer, had been committed April 5 by the same judge to Metropolitan State hospital for 35 days. The court approved a Boston police complaint of juvenile delinquency on a charge of arson at that time. At last week's hearing the judge released the youngster in his father's custody, but retained the court's control until the neglect charge is adjudicated.

Judge Connelly explained his unusual action of making his decision known in open court "because of the serious nature of the offense charged the four deaths and the great public interest." He said he felt the public had a right to know, but ordered the press to protect the identity of the child. There were also fires in other hotels where the "Sound of Music" company was previously quartered in Baltimore, Columbus and Minneapolis.

Off-Broadway Reviews

Put It In Writing

Cast: Jane Connell, Buzz Halliday, Barbara Gilbert, Bill Hinnant, Brandon Maggart, Jack Blackton, Kit Smythe, Will Mackenzie, Linda Mayne, Peter [illegible].

Although the material in "Put It In Writing" is uneven, the cast is talented. They make this new topical revue out of Chicago a diverting, mildly enjoyable evening.

Standouts are pint-sized Bill Hinnant, who survives a tasteless bit about Governor Rockefeller to give a delightful portrayal of a backward teenager in a skit about progressive education, and Jane Connell, who sings and clowns skillfully and makes the most of a number about the South called "Who's Gonna Take You To the Lynching, Kenny Lou?" With Buzz Halliday (a pretty lass, despite her name) and versatile Barbara Gilbert, Miss Connell belts an amusing song about Elizabeth you-know-who.

Brandon Maggart is entertaining as an absent-minded professor on television, and Kit Smythe is a knock-out in gold lame as a girl-about-town. Jack Blackton and Will Mackenzie are also ingratiating performers.

The show begins slowly, perks up toward the middle of act one, and has its best moments in the second segment. There are several dreary sketches, and the quick skits between numbers are uniformly poor. But there's enough acceptable material to allow the performers to shine. Bill Penn has staged the presentation with proper speed and professionalism, and the sets by Peter Harvey and costumes by Andre are excellent.

The Brig

Living Theatre presentation of a drama by Kenneth H. Brown. Staged by Judith Malina; sets, Julian Beck; lighting, Nikola Cernovich; assistant director, [illegible]. Opened May 15, '63, at the Living Theatre, N.Y.; $4.50 top weeknights, $4.75 weekends.

Cast: Jim Anderson, Henry Howard, Chic Ciccarelli, Warren Finnerty, James Tiroff, Tom Lillard, Rufus Collins, Steve Thompson, [illegible], William Shari, Jim Gates, [illegible], Gene [illegible], Roy [illegible], Leonard Hicks, Henry Proach, William [illegible], David [illegible].

"The Brig" has no plot, little characterization, and not a lot of comedy, so anyone seeking conventional theatre is due for frustration. But for those willing to accept the Living Theatre's production on its own terms, "The Brig" should be an unforgettable experience.

Written with relentless fury by Kenneth H. Brown, and staged superbly by Judith Malina, the work is a recreation of a day in a Marine Corps prison. Ten men, whose crimes are not specified, are subjected from dawn to dusk to the continuous, sadistic discipline of four guards. Hour after hour, as the inmates dress and undress again to be searched as they scrub the floors and march in the compound, they are hounded and beaten, and suffer unalleviated degradation. They are reduced to mere animals, aware that the slightest misstep will provoke unbridled wrath.

In the second act, when one prisoner learns that his release is imminent, the spectator aches with him for the moment of freedom. When another inmate goes mad, the audience reaction is not one of incredulity but of amazement that he stood such torture for so long. And when a new victim is admitted, there is a horrible expectation of the hell in store for him.

Miss Malina's staging is uncompromisingly realistic, but there are also subtleties in her direction and in the performance, and she and the actors make the stage crackle with the electricity of the situation. Jim Anderson, Chic Ciccarelli, Henry Howard and Warren Finnerty, as the guards, are demons, but human. Tom Lillard and Steve Thompson, two of the most prominent prisoners, are heartbreakingly earnest. Henry Proach, William Shari, Jim Gates, Rufus Collins and the others are also admirable, and Julian Beck's wire set is superb.

What crimes did the men commit? Are conditions in Marine brigs really so deplorable? These questions are not answered, but they do not seem important during the presentation. "The Brig" has no mercy for its audience. Its intensity is so great that it sometimes produces numbness, and its unmitigated, repetitive cruelty is almost unbearable. Although it is hardly a play at all, in a literal sense, it is a strong indictment of man's inhumanity to man, and it is brilliantly produced.

The Uncommon Denominator

Uncommon Co. presentation of a new improvisational theatre. Opened May 7, '63, at the Mermaid Theatre, N.Y.; $3.50 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Karen Black, Henry Jaglom, Peggy Pope, Leslie J. Stark.

Although "The Uncommon Denominator" is billed as a new improvisational theatre, there isn't much new about it. The targets for humor are mostly hackneyed, and the skits lack the freshness and satirical edge that distinguish living room fun from professional entertainment.

The four young players try hard, but lack the skill required. The two men, Henry Jaglom and Leslie J. Stark, come off best, since they have the best of the material. Subjects dealt with range from the A.M.A. to the Kennedys' baby, from the National Enquirer to fallout shelters.

Only three or four of the numbers are actually impromptu, the rest having been set earlier. But very few have the wit or cleverness that have made the Second City and the Premise so successful.

There is also a tendency to rely on nose-picking and the like for laughs, and to flirt with bad taste in sketches such as one on the Rockefeller marriage. Even the better routines are played too long, ending not with a bang but from inertia. All in all, the denominator is low.

Five Evenings

Terese Hayden presentation of a drama in two acts, by Alexander Volodin, adapted from the Russian by [illegible] and [illegible]. Staged by Miss Hayden; scenery, [illegible]. Opened May 9, '63, at the Village South Theatre, N.Y.; $3.50 top weeknights, $4.50 weekends.

Cast: Simon Oakland, Frances Heflin, Maria Tucci, John Strasberg, Joe Coffen, Vernon Weddle.

This is the Russian spring of Off-Broadway. On the heels of "The Dragon" and "The Chief Thing," both written in the U.S.S.R., comes "Five Evenings," a drama produced in Moscow and Leningrad in 1959.

Alexander Volodin's play turns out to be little more than a Slavic soap opera, tortuously following the course of two romances to happy endings. It is sentimental and interminable, with few dramatic values.

"Five Evenings" may have lost its charm in translation, and it would certainly have been helped by better acting. Simon Oakland is fine in the role of a proud but unhappy mechanic, and Maria Tucci, Joe Coffen and Vernon Weddle show ability. But Frances Heflin is wooden and monotonous in a crucial part, and John Strasberg, making his theatrical debut, is simply inadequate.

The staging, by Terese Hayden, is not very helpful. Funny scenes are played straight, and vice versa. "Five Evenings" could serve as a weapon in the cold war.

Utopia!

Eddy K Productions presentation of a musical in two acts, with book, lyrics and music by William [illegible]. Staged by Cecil [illegible]; sets and lighting, [illegible]; [illegible]; choreography, [illegible]; musical direction and arrangements, [illegible]; costumes, [illegible]. Opened May 6, '63, at the Folksbiene Playhouse, N.Y.; $4.50 top.

Cast: Louis Pierce, [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], [illegible], Lionel [illegible], [illegible].

If an award were given for the worst musical of the year, "Utopia" would win, hands down. Seldom has one show contained such a witless book, such uninspired music, and such insipid lyrics. The singing and choreography are equally inept, and the costumes and sets are among the most unattractive in memory.

"Utopia" deals—or misdeals—with two astronauts, one Russian and one American, who accidentally land in a combination Dogpatch-Brigadoon in the Rocky Mountains.

Show on B'way

The Beast in Me

Donald Productions presentation of revue in two acts (14 sketches), conceived by Haila Stoddard, adaptation and lyrics by James Costigan, music by Don Elliott, based on "Fables for Our Time," by James Thurber. Staged by John Lehne; musical staging, John Butler; orchestrations, Lehman Engel; settings and lighting, Jean Rosenthal; costumes, Leo Van Witsen. Opened May 16, '63, at the Plymouth Theatre, N.Y.; $8.60 top weeknights, $9.60 Friday-Saturday nights.

Cast: Bill Seltzer, Kaye Ballard, Allyn Ann McLerie, Richard Hayes, Bert Convy, Nancy Haywood, James Costigan.

Musical numbers: "Percussion," "So Beautiful," "You're Delicious," "Jet," "I Dream of Girls," "Go, Go, Go," "Sunday," "Eat Your Nice Lily, Unicorn," "Homecoming," "Glorious Cheese," "Calypso Kitty," "Why?" "What Do You Say?" "When I'm Alone," "Helpless."

Just before the orchestra began the overture for "The Beast in Me" at the Plymouth Theatre last Tuesday night (16), the stage manager came out and announced the news that astronaut Gordon Cooper had landed safely after his 22-orbit space flight. Everything after that was an anti-climax.

"The Beast in Me" is a revue based on the late James Thurber's "Fables of Our Time." It is thus a sort of pale successor to "A Thurber Carnival," a moderate critical hit and financial failure of three seasons ago.

In contrast to "Carnival," which captured something of the special Thurber flavor and had a number of amusing moments, "Beast" is embarrassingly arch, ponderous, prolix, humorless and pointless. It might do as an off-Broadway venture and would probably seem quite expert, or at least promising, for a college production.

One number in the new show is significant. It is a sketch about a termagant wife who won't believe that her husband has fed a unicorn in the garden. In "Carnival," particularly as played by Paul Ford and Alice Ghostley, it was terse, pungent and funny. As inflated and overproduced in "Beast," it's meandering, precious and, with a silly whimsy finale, comes across as a dull thud.

That's pretty much the story for the whole show, conceived by Haila Stoddard, with adaptation and lyrics by James Costigan, and music by Don Elliott. Allyn Ann McLerie is an attractive dish who dances capably and has an infectiously comic sparkle, and Kaye Ballard can belt over a song or a broad comedy line, though she gets little chance to do either.

The other performers, Richard Hayes, Bert Convy, Nancy Haywood and adaptator-lyricist Costigan, are personable and defeated. Marc Connelly, whose late addition to the cast required a two-day postponement of the preem, dropped out at the last minute, in time for an announcement in a program insert.

The show has been directed by John Lehne without discernible pace or style, and John Butler's musical staging also lacks firmness. Lehman Engel batons the pit orchestra skillfully, with composer Elliott featured on the mellophone. Jean Rosenthal's basic setting and lighting are imaginative, and Leo Van Witsen's costumes are effective, especially on Miss McLerie.

"Beast" is an unusually short show in actual running time, but it seems long.

Irene Worth to Costar With Gielgud in 'March'

Irene Worth will costar with John Gielgud in the Jerome Kilty dramatization of the Thornton Wilder novel, "Ides of March," which goes into rehearsal in London next month for a June 24 opening in Oxford. The presentation, which Kilty will co-direct with Gielgud, is being co-produced by David Black and H. M. Tennent Ltd. Plans call for the production to move from its tryout in the provinces to the West End and then next December to Broadway.

Black, a New York producer, also plans a Broadway production next October of David Turner's "Semi-Detached" with most of the original British company except Laurence Olivier.

Shubert Alley Shorts

When Jean Kerr had finished the first act of her new comedy, "Poor Richard," she asked her husband, N.Y. Herald Tribune drama critic Walter Kerr, for his opinion. "Well," she reported that he remarked on finishing it, "You're not in trouble yet." The author of "Mary, Mary" has since finished the new play, but is understandably in no hurry to have typescripts made. "As long as nobody can read it," she explains, "nobody can tell me what's wrong with it."

Helen Hayes has reportedly sold her home in Nyack, N.Y., but will retain title of the property until fall. She's understood planning to spend most of the summer at the place, which is only a few blocks from the business center of the Rockland County town, and has considerable ground, with substantial lawns sloping down to the Hudson River. The actress has already made arrangements to attend the Stratford (Ont.) Shakespearean Festival this summer for the first time.

"Cue's New York," by Emory Lewis, editor of Cue magazine, is due for publication this Friday (24) by Duell, Sloan & Pearce. The jacket bills it as "A Leisurely Guide to Manhattan". . . Word from Halifax is that everything is normal at the new Neptune Theatre, scheduled to open a repertory season this summer. Normal for a new legit project, that is. There's reportedly friction in the management and dissatisfaction among the actors in the Nova Scotia venture.

The Shot in Question

May 8, 1963.

Jack Minster presentation of two-act [illegible] drama by Michael Gilbert. Staged [illegible] by [illegible]. Features John Carson, Malcolm Russell, Edith Sharpe, Joanna Wake, Andre Molly, Archie Duncan, Derek Bloomfield, Kynaston Reeves. Opened May 7, '63, at the Duchess Theatre, London; $3.10 top.

Michael Gilbert has written a neat, if leisurely whodunit which seems more suitable for an hour on television than for a playhouse. The plot takes a long time to get moving and then the action is all reasonably predictable. Still, the author has a sense of characterization and dialog and is aided by able direction and playing.

"The Shot in Question," billed as a play of conjecture, has nothing to do with firearms. The title refers to a morphine injection. When the diabetic daughter of a drug addict is killed in a motor crash and her body is found to contain morphine, it turns out that the doctor has been issuing more narcotics than his records indicate, so mystery to be solved is who is guilty, of what, how and why?

It eventually emerges that the doctor has been blackmailed into supplying the drug addict with morphine. The doctor and the addict's daughter had been involved, which raised the question of professional ethics. The author tidies up the plot adequately, though with minimum excitement and little lasting impact.

Derek Bloomfield is effective as a glum but efficient policeman, Andree Melly brings brisk charm to the role of the doctor's wife and Joanna Wake makes brief impact as the victim. John Carson doesn't animate the dull role of the hero, and Archie Duncan tends to overdo the part of the blackmailing junkie.

Kynaston Reeves has no difficulty with his portrayal of a bland, shrewd retired doctor, Edith Sharpe gives a straightforward reading of an efficient housekeeper and Malcolm Russell rounds off the cast adequately as the inevitable village cop. Hendrik Baker, who also staged the play, provides a serviceable set.

"The Shot in Question" is unlikely to raise much boxoffice or audience blood pressure, even among hypochondriacs who may revel in Gilbert's professional medical jargon.

Same Man and Woman

London, May 9, 1963.

Tennent Productions Ltd. (in arrangement with the Frederick [illegible] Trust Ltd.) presentation of a [illegible] of Lewis Casson. Opened May 8, '63, at the [illegible] Theatre, London; $3.10 top.

No British theatrical partnership is more revered than the husband-and-wife team of Sybil Thorndike and Lewis Casson, and this bond of affection and respect ensures a welcome for this limited, 13-performance run of verse and drama extracts from their repertoire. Both in their 80's, they have lessons of enunciation and enthusiasm to offer; the program expresses their own tastes and ability to limn characters simply and precisely.

On a shallow set with two chairs and a flower-decorated table, the stars take the center chore in turns, and make an affectionate contrast of manner, Miss Thorndike more impulsive and assertive, Casson reserved and punctilious.

Drama is represented by excerpts from "Henry VIII," in which Miss Thorndike revives memories of her earlier interpretation of Catherine of Aragon and Casson takes several minor parts, including two Cardinals, with aplomb, and by the closing scene of Euripides's "The Trojan Women," with Miss Thorndike again recalling the impact of her famous Hecuba. To some extent, these are the most unsatisfactory parts of the show, as they demand too much faith on the part of the audience. A Cardinal in a dress suit and a Hecuba in a ball-gown is rather much to swallow.

But other items of straight verse-speaking are a delight. Most outstanding are Miss Thorndike's accounts of unfamiliar Keats and Edmund Spenser, a duologue in which they impersonate a Welsh couple in an old ballad, and Casson's delivery of a French ballad about a man whose ambition was to visit a neighboring town — and his death on the way to it.

Some of the other material, particularly in the second half, is fustian and old-fashioned. Sincerity and professionalism cannot really disguise the poverty of ailing poems by such as Gordon Bottomley, Ernest Radford, and John Casson. But this segment is partially saved by impressive speaking of four pieces by Gerard Manley Hopkins, and by Miss Thorndike extracting the essence of Edna St. Vincent Millay.

It is a warming exhibition of expertise and craft by practitioners who have devoted their lives to their profession and still have more to give to the public than dozens of queue-causers who now litter the marquees.

B'way Hit Again by Spring B.O. Ebb; 'Loves Me' $45,492, 'Photo' N.G. $19,359; 'Beast' Flops Out, 'Hot Spot' Folding

Broadway tapered off again last week, according to seasonal pattern. Unlike the previous week, however, there was a moderate boxoffice pickup Saturday night (18). The trend for this week appears to be slightly down again, but there are advance signs of interest for the early June period, so the usual decline then may be modified a bit.

"She Loves Me," which has failed to reach capacity pace despite generally enthusiastic notices, dipped last week, but is nevertheless earning a comfortable operating profit. "Mr. President" also dwindled, obviously reflecting the approaching end of its party bookings, while "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off" and "Strange Interlude" likewise eased off.

"Tovarich" registered a drop, but since it was without parties for the first time, the musical appears to be set to span the summer and probably continue well into the fall, apparently on the unexpectedly potent boxoffice draw of Vivien Leigh.

"Little Me," which also sagged, apparently will have to depend on twofers to carry it much further. Although still well over the break-even level, "Hot Spot" has used up its party bookings, and folds next Saturday (25). "No Strings" is already set for tour, opening Aug. 5 in Boston.

"Rattle of a Simple Man," another disappointing grosser after its preponderantly favorable notices, is just about holding on, but is due for a boost from Show-of-the-Month Guild business and a few parties. "Photo Finish," which has likewise failed to live up to the indications of the reviews, declined a bit further last week and may not last much longer.

"How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" held to its capacity-plus pace, and "Never Too Late" again approximated capacity. "Oliver" and "Beyond the Fringe," however, have dropped out of the sellout category.

Last week's two closings were "The Beast in Me," which expired after only four regular performances, and "Tchin-Tchin," which folded at a loss after 222 performances. There are no openings this week.

"A Man for All Seasons" is now due to close next week after a fine run of 637 performances. "Strange Interlude" moves next week to the Martin Beck, where the marathon drama will continue on a six-performance schedule until its slated closing July 13.

Aussie Ballet to Make First New Zealand Tour

Melbourne, May 21.

Following its Brisbane engagement, the Australian Ballet will make its first overseas tour, to New Zealand. Then the company will be split into three groups, one touring New South Wales and Queensland, another Victoria, South Australia and Tasmania and a third will form a theatre ballet for the Australian Elizabethan Opera Trust's forthcoming season.

Following the tour, the company will take a vacation, the first since its formation 18 months ago. Then it opens a new tour at the Adelaide Festival next March. Under Peggy Van Praagh's guidance, the company has developed and is a partnership between J. C. Williamson Theatres Ltd. and the Australian Elizabethan Theatre Trust, draws on trust funds, receives a direct subsidy from the Federal Government and sponsorship by large national and local firms.

The company for the first season has been headed by top dancers from abroad, including Sonia Arova, Eric Bruhn, Caj Selling, Jonathan Watts, Robert Pomie, Karl Welander and Ray Powell. Australians taking principal roles have been Kathleen Gorham, Marilyn Jones and Garth Welch.

Ready 2d Tuner Season For Rochester (N.H.)

Rochester, N. H., May 21.

The Rochester Music Theatre, operated for the first time last year at the Municipal Auditorium, will present nine musical comedies this year, starting July 3. Robert LeBlanc, a native of nearby Dover, is the producer and has been holding cast auditions in New York.

The schedule will open with "West Side Story" and close with "Oklahoma."

Bi-Racial 'Premise'

An integrated cast will open June 4 at The Premise, N.Y. The group will succeed Tom Aldredge, Joan Darling, Jim Frawley and Premise producer Ted Flicker at the improvisational showcase in Greenwich Village. The latter four, who've been giving Premise performances during the last three years in London, Washington and Miami, as well as Manhattan, will continue at the Village spot until May 26. They'll then take a leave of absence to make a film, "The Troublemaker," after which they'll vacation.

The integrated company, which will begin preview performances May 27, will include Calvin Ander, Godfrey Cambridge, Jo Ann Le Compte, Al Freeman Jr. and Diana Sands.

Coast CLO Spurs Okay Road's Pace; 'Succeed' $91,402, Det.; 'Dad' 36½G S.F. 'World' $52,373, Cleve.; 'Mary' Mop-Up

The road generally held about the same pace last week as the previous stanza. That contrasted again with the continued seasonal decline of Broadway.

There were five major grossers among the touring shows. "How To Succeed in Business," topping itself in its fourth week in Detroit, led the list, while "Camelot" in Los Angeles, "Carousel" in San Francisco, "The Sound of Music" and the three road editions of "Mary, Mary" piled up lush returns.

In the case of the Jean Kerr comedy, the combined gross was $78,000, which with the show's increased receipts on Broadway, brought the week's total take to $102,318 and earned about $10,000 more royalty for the author.

"Pajama Tops," winding up its tour on two-for-ones, nose-dived in Baltimore. It opens a cut-price stand on Broadway next week. "Shot in the Dark" picked up smartly in Chicago, but closes a generally disappointing tour next Saturday (25).

The second company of "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off," continued its road cleanup with a strong week in Cleveland. "Milk and Honey" went sour in Cincinnati and "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad" zoomed in its second week in San Francisco.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout, RS indicates road show and BT indicates bus-and-truck production. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal tax and local tax, if any, but as on Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Where subscription is mentioned, the gross is the net after the deductions of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

Drama Circle Minutes

Editor, VARIETY:

I read the account of the meeting of the New York Drama Critics Circle in VARIETY for May 8. May I correct an error? It is true that I was ill and did not attend the meeting, but the minutes were taken. Joseph T. Shipley acted on my behalf and took the minutes of the meeting, which he sent to me for correlation and addition to the membership book.

Nureyev Autobiog More Cogent Than Mere Saga Of a USSR 'Defector'

"Nureyev" (Dutton; $5) is the autobiography of the stellar Russian dancer currently appearing in the U. S. with the Royal Ballet from Britain. Book is short, but rewarding, after all Nureyev is barely 25. Alexander Bland, ballet critic for the London Observer, provides an introduction and an afterword. There are remarkable photographs by Richard Avedon, Michael Peto, Anthony Crickmay and others.

Since his short term with the Kirov Ballet Studio in Leningrad, Nureyev has learned English. He taped his memoirs, and Bland has edited them with care and distinction. It is reported that dancer's perfectionism led him to reshape many passages of this book, and Bland suggests that no matter what appeared eventually in print, Nureyev would have been less than satisfied.

Dancer has no cause to apologize. Tome opens with an account of his melodramatic escape from Russian security officers at Le Bourget airport in Paris, which is worthy of a Hitchcock script. Nureyev's report, almost clinical, of an artist's life in a totalitarian state should be widely read, particularly by those who imagine that leniency is granted to creative people in such climates. From the time the young dancer drew attention by his excellence on stage, he was under constant surveillance, not only by the police, but by teachers and associates. He was reprimanded during his early tours with Soviet dance troupes because he enjoyed moving about foreign capitals alone, making new friends. Even in Russia, his interest in the visiting company of "My Fair Lady" aroused suspicion and criticism. When Nureyev "defected," he did so in desperation, knowing that if he returned to Moscow, as he had been ordered to do, his career would be over.

Whatever the future of this gifted young man, no one can put aside his memoirs in doubt about his dedication to his art. For one so young, he also views his world and his times with unique clarity and considerable singleness of purpose. Despite his struggles with a police state, book contains little bitterness. There is healthy anger for stupidity and intolerance, and some pathos in his desire to complete his work at the Kirov. Book should attract far wider audience than merely readers interested in the dance. Rodo.

Concert Review

Hague Philharmonic
(CARNEGIE HALL, N.Y.)

Amsterdam's Concertgebouw has played the States on several occasions but until now the founded-in-1904 group of The Hague has not been heard here. Now this other Dutch symphony proves first rate, though the program presented was not ideal, lacking something in showcase variety. Weakest item was the "Electra" suite of Diepenbrock, obviously selected because of its Dutch origin. Mozart's 36th and Bruckner's third completed the music offered by Maestro Willem Van Otterloo.

Hague ensemble, 110 strong, at least eight of them women, had completed some 25 dates as far west as Chicago under the Columbia Concert banner before displaying itself to a cordial and generally impressed New York audience.

Clearly this is a well-disciplined body of musicians. Their style is clean and firm, their professionalism beyond doubt. They made a strong initial impression and undoubtedly will return again to this country. Land.

Dance Reviews

Karmon Israeli Dancers

[illegible]

Cast: Karmon, [illegible]

Displaying contagious verve and bounce, this troupe of 14 young singing and dancing Israelis performs 22 beyond-folk-dancing numbers in two one-hour parts. The presentation is well-costumed, interestingly lit and sufficiently varied to get big response, numerous curtains and bring three encores from the opening night audience.

The mainstay as both star and choreographer is Jonathan Karmon, founder of the company, who has evolved an extension of the ethnic dances of half-a-dozen countries which have poured their Jews into Israel. The work is not altogether modern terpsichore, but with plenty of resemblance, and has interesting echoes of ballet and story-telling in the movements which excel in the group action of the troupe, especially when the men twine arms for living-frieze sextets.

The burden of singing rests with Shenita Zahavi, the keystone of several dramatic numbers. The weakness of company is in the music. The combo of two accordions, drum and flute-shepherd's pipe tends to thin out and become monotonous as the evening progresses. The choice of score fails to give the performers sufficient lift and backing.

Otherwise, it is an almost totally delightful evening which avoids the dull repetitiousness which often overcomes this sort of presentation. Especially effective are a Hassidic dance of joy, "Moses and the Daughters of Yitro" story with a stave battle starring Karmon; a lively hopping dance by the men, "Debka of the Desert", and another Arab Debka dance, "Raflach."

The costumes are colorful, effective and changes are numerous. Ralph Alswang's lighting, especially the shadow effects, is noteworthy. The youthful performers have attractive zest and clean-cut appearance, with several lookers among the girls. Leve.

Fiesta Flamenca

London, May 8.

[illegible]

In contrast to other Spanish dance troupes on the international circuit, this one sticks to the flamenco idiom without any attempt at variation with self-conscious story ballets or revivals of classical terping styles. Thus the impact, which is formidable and seems likely to pack them in for the company's limited engagement, depends mainly on the gypsy fire and abandon, plus technical virtuosity, of the team of terpers. It says much for the calibre of the dancers that monotony is avoided.

The show starts with a lesson in style, with the leggy, statuesque and intense star of the company, Manuela Vargas, being instructed by Enrique el Cojo. This effectively deploys the sinuous passion and scope of the movements, and the surprising grace of el Cojo, an elderly and spherical gent, is an attention-clincher in itself.

The gay side of flamenco is then displayed for the rest of the first half, introduced by consummate throaty warbling from Jarrito, whose vocal gymnastics thrill. The company's leading male dancer, El Guito, also scores in a dedicated bout of heel-and-toe work, and a zestrously terper on the distaff side also provides sparkling footwork.

It is in the second part of the program, however, that Miss Vargas comes into her own. Revealed by a tragic artist, wielding her caterpillar train accordingly and with pride, she memorably interprets the more sombre side of love, and this segment also includes an incisive dance, on the theme of work, by the powerful Rafael "El Negro." And the show closes with wild and exhilarating improvisation by the entire company, electric in effect.

In fact, this is a company with three great artists and a fund of infectious enjoyment overcoming artistic shortcomings in the support. The production is simple and good, and Joe Davis provides lighting that sets the frenetic events against variously colored skies, setting the mood but not distracting. The musical backing, by a trio of guitarists, is adequate, and the singing of Manuel Soto and Chano Lobato is forthright and punchy. Otta.

ATPAM Vote a Formality; Union to Move Offices

The Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers is conducting a no-contest election this year for officers and board members. Unopposed candidates include Broadway general managers Richard Horner and Joseph Harris for the respective posts of president and vice-president and incumbents Milton Weintraub, secretary-treasurer; Edward J. Brandon, business agent, and George Zorn, sergeant-at-arms. Thomas Kilpatrick and James Hughes declined to run for fourth terms as respective president and vice-president.

Nominated for the board of governors in the managers division are George Banyai, chairman, and Ben Boyar, Denis Du For and Dick Seader. Pressagent nominees for the board from the New York chapter are Reginald Denenholz and Ben Kornzweig and from the road ranks Glen Allvine and Maurice Turet. The Yiddish group slate for the board comprises Oscar Green and William Mercur. All of the nominees for the board are running without competition.

All ballots, which have been mailed to the union's membership, must be in the hands of the election tellers not later than midnight June 6. The election date is June 10. Early June will also mark the move of ATPAM to new quarters in the Times Square area.

74G Rockefeller Grant For Twin Cities Drama

Minneapolis, May 21.

The Univ. of Minnesota has received a Rockefeller Foundation two-year $74,000 grant to finance a program to make the Twin Cities a centre creative theatre operation. The school's Theatre Arts department will use the grant to explore the problems "which inhibit development of drama and theatre and to look for ways in which new creative work can be stimulated."

Prof. D. K. Smith the department's head, notes that "one of the assumptions on which the program is based is that the American theatre needs to foster the production of new drama, appropriate in form and statement to our own immensely complicated age." He says the Twin Cities were chosen for the project because of its the college's Theatre Arts department, the Tyrone Guthrie repertory theatre's establishment here and the area's development of community theatres.

Legit Followups

Mary, Mary
HELEN HAYES THEATER, N.Y.

No matter who appears in it or for how long, "Mary, Mary" is irresistibly entertaining. After more than two years and various cast changes, the original production at the Helen Hayes Theatre wins and holds the audience, and the Jean Kerr comedy has almost invariably clicked wherever the several touring editions have played. It has also succeeded in numerous presentations overseas, including London, where the critics generally gave the credit to the leading lady, Maggie Smith.

It's impressive to see how the play triumphs in its present Broadway performances, without a single one of the original cast. Diane Lynn, in the part originally portrayed by Barbara Bel Geddes, is an attractive actress and personality, with a reasonably effective comedy touch, a thin, nasal voice and a seeming incapacity for repose or relaxation onstage.

The voice is not a serious drawback, as an audience becomes accustomed to it, but Miss Lynn's apparent restlessness and her tendency to keep changing her facial expression is distracting. She's a pretty woman, and she'd make that a greater asset. In particular, she has an infectious smile, worth waiting for, and she should not squander it.

It's hard to account for Tom Poston's performance as the obtuse but likable husband. It makes Barry Nelson's original portrayal an absolute triumph in retrospect, instead of merely the unobtrusively expert characterization it seemed at the time. Poston apparently cannot extricate himself from the sort of hokum facial and bodily caricaturing he uses for laughs as a television panelist and m.c., and he thereby loses the humor of the "Mary, Mary" situation and many of laughs in Mrs. Kerr's deceptively skillful dialog. He also must be exasperatingly difficult for the other actors to play with.

Edward Mulhare, in the Hollywood idol part originated by Michael Rennie and later played by Michael Wilding, is acceptably suave and amusing, and it's now incomprehensible that the title heroine doesn't choose him in preference to her hoarish, mugging husband. Howard St. John, in the role of the lawyer first played by John Cromwell, gives a smoothly competent portrayal. (He has since been succeeded by Sherman Sherman, transferring from one of the road companies).

Ellen Weston appears inexperienced as the sappy but essentially nice fiancee, but she gives an admirably direct performance, with the illusion of really listening and reacting to the other players.

Despite the disconcerting inadequacies of its presentation after the long run, "Mary, Mary" impresses anew as an essentially true expression of attitude, dealing with real people in a believable situation. As one of the most enjoyable light romantic comedies of recent years, it's a deservedly enormous hit. Hobe.

Oklahoma

After a hiatus of only two months, "Oklahoma" is back at the City Center. The cast is, with a few exceptions, the same as in the March revival, and since the singers are excellent and the dancers fine, the production's return is welcome.

New performers include Fay De Witt as Ado Annie and Barry Newman as Ali Hakim. They are well cast, and contribute amusing portrayals. Peter Palmer and Louise O'Brien are both still in good voice, and they make Curley and Laurie appealing lovers. Daniel P. Hannafin is effectively sinister as Jud, and Richard Franco is agile and entertaining as Will Parker. Betty Garde as Aunt Eller and William Tierney as Ado Annie's father are also winning.

The real stars of the show, however, are the memorable Rodgers and Hammerstein songs and Agnes DeMille's superb choreography, brilliantly executed by Mavis Ray, Evelyn Taylor and the other dancers. John Fearnley's staging is top-notch.

Next on the City Center's schedule are revivals of "Pal Joey" and "The King and I." If they're done as well as "Oklahoma," they'll also be treats. Kenn.

Guthrie Theatre Group Protests M'pls Tax Move

Minneapolis, May 21.

The Tyrone Guthrie Theatre Foundation that organized and sponsors the new Tyrone Guthrie repertory theatre is protesting a recommendation of City Assessor J. R. Garson to the State Tax Commissioner that the playhouse be put on the real estate tax rolls. Garson puts a $2,100,000 valuation on the theatre and says the tax should be approximately $65,000 a year.

The Foundation contends that the theatre should have the same tax-exempt status granted to schools, churches, cemetery property, federal and state-owned property and certain cultural institutions, like art galleries. But the city official, explaining his position to the Minneapolis Board of Realtors, insisted that, instead of being a non-profit venture, "this is a commercial operation—a business."

According to J. V. Smith, Foundation vice-president, the group "is dismayed and puzzled by Garson's recommendation. The Tyrone Guthrie Theatre is owned by a non-profit corporation and the lessees and licensee of the theatre building are non-profit corporations, all operated exclusively for charitable and educational purposes."

The Foundation will argue the matter at a hearing to be set by the State Taxation Commissioner. The City Assessor commented that he's wondering "how many Minneapolis residents are interested in paying for this luxury." The issue may be settled this week.

More German Cities Set Productions of 'Deputy'

Frankfurt, May 21.

Though the arguments are growing hotter about Rolf Hochhuth's play, "The Deputy" (concerning what Pope Pius XII did or didn't do to help the Jews during the Hitler regime), interest in the drama has grown so much that several other West German stages are planning to stage it. General manager Harry Buckwitz is planning to do the work next fall in Frankfurt, and the city stages of Bielefeld, Flensburg and Giessen have also decided to offer it.

General manager Willy Maertens has also optioned the play for the Thalia Theatre in Hamburg, and the City Stage in Basel, which had first optioned the drama and then cancelled out, has reopened negotiations. Meanwhile, the Frankfurt outlet of the First Television Network is planning a documentary titled "Can the Pope Remain Silent?" on this same topic for May 29. It will provide several authorities on both sides to discuss this sensitive topic.

Vernon Rice Awards

The annual Vernon Rice Awards for "outstanding achievement" in the off-Broadway theatre were presented last week at a Drama Desk luncheon in New York to playwrights Oliver Hailey, author of "Hey You, Light Man"; Murray Schisgal, author of "The Typists" and "The Tiger," and William Hanley, author of "Whisper into My Good Ear" and "Mrs. Dally Has a Lover." Similar awards in production were also given to "The Coach with Six Insides" and "The Boys From Syracuse."

Stuart Little was re-elected president of the Drama Desk at the luncheon and other officers elected were Frances Herridge, vice-president; John E. Booth, secretary; William Talbot, treasurer, and Maxine Keith, membership chairman and hostess.

Robert Loggia is to star in Morton Fenster's "Habitation of Dragons," which Mary Frank plans producing next season with Vincent Donahue as director.

Seasonal Risk

"The Summer of Daisy Miller," which had been scheduled to open tonight (Wed.) at the Phoenix Theatre, N.Y., has postponed the premiere until next Monday night (27) because Bryarly Lee, the title actress in the Fortran Greene dramatization of the Henry James story, "Daisy Miller," tripped and fell during rehearsal, and fractured her arm.

The off-Broadway management considered, but decided not to retitle the show "The Fall of Daisy Miller."

Practical Theap Manual

"Opportunities in Acting" by Dick Moore (Universal; $1.65) is, at least, that greatest of rarities, a realistic and useful handbook for theapians, both tyros and those with some pro experience. Author is former film child star and Broadway player, currently editor of Equity Magazine, official organ of actors' trade union. Equity prexy, Ralph Bellamy, supplies a foreword to this paperback entry.

Covering all performing media with sound, if disenchanted advice, Moore's tome nevertheless is respectful of the acting art and its possibilities. Among features making book of genuine value to theaps is inclusion of such material as company manager Richard Grayson's excellent instructions upon the manner in which hopefuls should approach producers via letters, pix, resumes, etc. Volume is in Universal's series of vocational guidance manuals. Rode.

Canal Fulton, Near Cleve., Booking Summer Season

Cleveland, May 21.

Farley Granger will check into the Canal Fulton (O.) Summer Arena Theatre next week for rehearsals as lead in "Tops in the Attic." It starts the pro company's 10th season June 4. David Fulford and William Dempsey of New York and Elizabeth Ritter of Canal Fulton are again co-producers of a 16-week series at this stand near Cleveland.

Although dates are not definite, commitments include Majorie Lord in "Blithe Spirit," Arnold Stang and Renee Taylor in "Three Men on a Horse," Ann Harding in "The Corn Is Green," Karl Holliman and Anthony George in "The Tender Trap" and Dody Goodman in "Sunday in New York."

George Montgomery will appear in his touring package show, "King of Hearts." Joe E. Brown returns in "Elmer the Great" for a date tentatively set at July 2. Pat O'Brien and his wife Eloise in "Holiday for Lovers" are slated for June 28-30.

Canal Fulton's other gueststars will include Edward Everett Horton in "Miss Pell Is Missing," and Betty White in a show to be selected.

Indiana Univ. Showboat Set for Expanded Sked

Bloomington, Ind., May 21.

The floating dramatic classroom, the Majestic Showboat, operated by Indiana Univ., present "East Lynne" and "Charley's Aunt" this season, its fourth under the college sponsorship. Purchased in 1959 with funds from the institution's Brown County Playhouse, the Majestic has played to more than 75,000 persons along the Ohio River in the last three seasons.

This year's itinerary has been expanded, and will include Paducah and Hickman, Ky., and Cairo, Benidere, and Metropolis, Ill. The season opener, June 7, will be "East Lynne" at Cincinnati.

Lincoln Rep's Internal Stress

By ROBE MORRISON

Insiders are making book on how long Elia Kazan and Robert Whitehead, respective artistic and managerial heads of the Lincoln Center Repertory Theatre, will be able to get along with George Woods, its financial boss. They won the first tussle, but the big money representative, former president of the World Bank, reportedly took the situation with less than philosophic cheer, and there'll presumably be more policy conflicts in future.

When it became evident that the Center's Vivian Beaumont Theatre would not be completed by next fall, when the permanent company is scheduled to start public performances, Kazan and Whitehead are understood to have proposed renting a Broadway theatre on a term basis, or possibly arranging to use a campus theatre at some fairly nearby college. Neither idea was feasible, however, so Kazan and Whitehead scouted around and worked out the project for New York Univ. to provide a site on its Washington Square land for a temporary theatre building for use until the permanent Lincoln Square house is ready.

Woods reportedly vetoed the proposal, however, as Kazan and Whitehead went outside for capitalization, thereby making it an independent operation not subject to supervision by the top brass of Lincoln Center. Robert W. Dowling, the realty tycoon and financier, was persuaded to run interference on the project, not only using the American National Theatre & Academy name to sponsor the fund campaign, but wielding his influence as Mayor Wagner's cultural deputy to expedite permits and waivers from the various municipal departments and agencies involved.

Elbowed Out

An angle of Dowling's entry into the situation is that he was willing to help out despite the fact that he had been, in effect, elbowed out of the Lincoln Center project early in its planning stage. He is a partner of Roger L. Stevens, not only in the Producers Theatre and the operation of several Broadway legit houses, but also in various major realty ventures, as well as an associate in the administration of ANTA.

Thus, when Stevens was eased out of the original Lincoln Center program, after going as far as to have a noted architectural firm draft spectacular plans for a unit of five connected legit theatres in the center, it amounted to Dowling being bypassed also. Nevertheless, Dowling evidently shrugged off whatever resentment he may have felt, and agreed to head the fund drive and use his political connections to promote the temporary theatre scheme.

Neither Stevens nor Dowling has been theatrically hogtied by exclusion from the Lincoln Center project, of course. Dowling took on the tough task of heading the financial drive for the National Cultural Center in Washington, and then enlisted Stevens to take active charge.

Stevens, meanwhile, was recruited by the Actors Studio to direct the coin-raising efforts for its producing off-shoot, Actors Studio Theatre, which has thus far presented the current "Strange Interlude" revival on Broadway. Stevens also continues his own independent Broadway producing activities, which included at least participation in the presentation of seven new shows this season.

An added wrinkle to the matter of the temporary theatre to be erected in the Washington Square area of Greenwich Village, N. Y., is that when the repertory company transfers to the permanent house at Lincoln Center, the steel structure will belong to Kazan and Whitehead. They can dispose of it, either to NYU or someone else, or could operate it themselves. According to plans, it will be a movable structure, so it can be transferred to some other location in New York or elsewhere. In any case, Kazan and Whitehead will have another theatre of their own, to do with as they choose, when the repertory company is finally settled in Lincoln Center.

The essential question, however, remains how long the working arrangement between the team of Kazan and Whitehead and Woods will last. A vital element in the situation is that Kazan retains freedom of action, as he has not yet signed a contract with the Center. He is presumably under a degree of moral obligation not to walk out of the project, but he is not legally committed and is thus in position to make an issue matters of authority and policy.

S.F. Hotel Tumers Close; Open Spot in Berkeley

San Francisco, May 21.

The Sheraton-Palace Hotel closed out its Garden Court Dinner-Theatre last Sunday night (12) with the final performance of "Bye Bye, Birdie" starring Van Johnson. The operation will lay off until Aug. 27. Russell Lewis and Howard Young, who put on the S-P shows, will spend the summer planning for the autumn and running their successful Sacramento Music Circus, a tent operation.

Meanwhile, a new musicomedy format goes into the Berkeley Community Theatre starting June 18 with Janet Blair in "South Pacific." The producer is Ben Kapen, formerly of the Charlotte (N.C.) Summer Theatre, who leased the hall from the Berkeley Board of Education for 11 weeks, with options for two more years.

There will be 11 shows, each to play a week. Announced so far are Anne Jeffreys in "Bells Are Ringing," July 9; Tom Poston in "Bye Bye, Birdie," July 23; Carla Alberghetti in "West Side Story," July 30 and Ann Blyth in "Carnival," August 26.

Theodore Mann to Stage Wilder Plays, Olney, Md.

Washington, May 21.

Theodore Mann, New York producer-director, will be guest director for the Olney Theatre's summer season opener, "Plays for Bleecker Street," a triple-bill of Thornton Wilder one-acters. The strawhat house in suburban Olney, Md., will be in its 11th season under the operation of the University Players (formerly known as Players Inc.), an organization of former and current Catholic Univ. drama students.

The season will run May 28-Sept 8, with five productions, each for three weeks. Following "Bleecker Street" will be Gore Vidal's adaptation of Friederich Durrenmatt's "Romulus," Maurice Valency's adaptation of the same author's "The Visit," Jean Anouilh's "Time Remembered" and Harold Pinter's "The Caretaker."

LONDON BENEFIT SHOW

Hope to Raise $1,000,000 for Army Fund in Palladium Revue

London, May 21.

In an effort to raise $1,000,000 for the Army Benevolent Fund, the premier military charity in the United Kingdom, more than 25 stars will appear in a midnight benefit show at the London Palladium on the anniversary of D-Day, June 6. Princess Marina, the Duchess of Kent, is to attend.

Mrs John Profumo, wife of the Minister of Defense, former actress Valerie Hobson, and Harry Secombe and Richard Todd are among the official organizers of the show, which will be staged by Francis Essex, producer of ATV's regular "Sunday Night at the London Palladium" presentation. Since its inception in 1945, the fund, which helps veterans of the two world wars, has handed out more than $14,000,000 in aid.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Publication of the costs involved in the Vienna Staatsoper's new production of "Tannhaeuser" has set tongues wagging all over that city. According to one source, the $80,000 to $100,000 budget is equal to the cost of 10 productions for a full year. Included in the huge budget was $10,000 for wigs ordered in Germany, with $2,000 of the wig total being paid as duty.

There have been two performances so far of "Tannhaeuser," with a third set for this month. Since a sold out house at normal prices normally brings in about $6,000, proceeds from the two "Tannhaeuser" performances to date have covered only the cost of the wigs.

Under an exchange agreement with Milan's La Scala, guest artists receive fees of between $1,500 and $2,000 per night about five or six times what their Vienna resident equivalents get.

If You've the Time, Messrs., Go See 'Irma' at Playhouse

By [illegible]

"Once upon a time, there was a poule . . ." So begins the modern fairy tale "Irma La Douce." Never mind that a poule is, by definition, a streetwalker. For Irma is no ordinary poule. She belongs in a child's book of fables. More sweet than tart, she has now strolled the boulevards of Paris, won the hearts of London, spent 527 profitable evenings on Broadway and last night—just a step ahead of the film—arrived on Long Island.

If you haven't yet met Irma, arrange your rendezvous by calling the Mineola Playhouse. You have only until June 9. And, even if your paths have crossed in the past, what better chance to refresh memories?

Not that Irma's character has improved with age. And not that it needed to. For if walking the streets is truly the oldest profession, then writing about streetwalkers with hearts of gold must run a close second. Still, never has the gold seemed so innocent, so wholesome, so from the heart. Never has vice seemed so [illegible], so deserving of the Good Housekeeping Seal of Approval.

Genevieve, until now, has been known primarily as the girl who did late-night baseball scores on the old Jack Paar Show. Genevieve brings the appeal of an elf, the business acumen of a wheeling-dealing gamin, a fine throaty voice and a French accent of unquestionable authenticity. Genevieve, it is clear, believes in Irma. And, more to the point, so may you.

LONG ISLAND PRESS, MAY 15, 1963

'Irma La Douce' Takes the Cake

By WILLIAM A. RAIDY
Press Entertainment Editor

"Genevieve is a delicious tart!

"Television's delightful bit of French confection made her debut at the Mineola Playhouse last night in the title role of 'Irma La Douce,' a highly delightful musical tribute to Paris low-life.

"Genevieve, as the tart-with-a-heart, is the most charming lady of the evening since Eve herself. She swings a bag and her hoods as if she were born on the sidewalks . . . of Paris, of course.

"We've seen four productions of 'Irma,' from Paris where it was born, to London, to Broadway. The Mineola Playhouse version is the first which makes Irma a real live doll, not a singing and dancing machine. This Genevieve gives Irma a Personality. Genevieve is as French as a warm croissant. She is at times sweet, coquettish and always utterly charming.

"Irma La Douce"—as brought to light by Genevieve—spells Paris and it is springtime. If you can't get to Paris visit 'Irma' instead. You'll feel years younger."

That Hamilton Woman

Toronto, May 9.

Crest Theatre Foundation presentation of revue in two acts ... Staged by Alan Lund ... musical director ... Stars Barbara Hamilton; features William Walker, Tom Kneebone. Opened May 8, '63, at the Crest Theatre, Toronto; $4.50 top.

Financed by Robert Goulet and Kate Reid, local performers who have appeared successfully on Broadway, Barbara Hamilton has emerged from revue roles of the past to appear in a virtual one-woman show, "That Hamilton Woman." Her material avoids political satire but includes social comment, with plenty of double.

The show is assured a trans-Canada tour, and there's talk of a London engagement during July-August. The star has wisely included the work of New York and English writers, including Bill Dana, Bud McCreery and Don Francks, although the contributions of Leslie McFarlane, Dolores Claman and Richard Morris prove audience standouts.

Dana's "Conversation Piece," in which Miss Hamilton does a tough femme [illegible], is contrasted with her interpretation of a rubber-faced baby doll in McCreery's "Tranquilizers" and "We Who are about to Diet," plus the reverse switch of a Cinderella who doesn't want to go to the ball.

Singly or in tandem, the star has the support of Bill Walker as bland straight man and Tom Kneebone as clown, with the latter too British and dragging his punch lines. It is Miss Hamilton's show, however, though there are audience-entertainment failures. In general, Miss Hamilton is superb.

Alan Lund's staging is brisk and controlled. Stuart Mackay's costume changes are breathtaking in speed and design, the standing set is tasteful, but the lighting was atrocious, at least on opening night. McStay.

A Very Close Family

Winnipeg, May 11.

Manitoba Theatre Centre presentation of a comedy drama by Bernard Slade. Staged by George McCowan; settings, Colin Winslow; lighting, Joseph Stell. Opened May 10, '63, at the Theatre Centre, Winnipeg; $3 top.

Cast: Bud Knapp, Joan Murray, Ken James, Joyce Gordon, Joel Kettner, Anna Reiser, Gordon Pinsent, John Vernon, Joan Penton, Marion Sollell.

Another in the series of Canada Council-sponsored original Canadian plays, this comedy drama by Toronto tv and radio writer Bernard Slade just doesn't make it. The author's theme never becomes clear, and the anti-climaxes prove more a source of wonder than understanding. Reduced to an hour on radio or television, the play could find its place—on stage it's boredom.

George McCowan, also noted for his tv direction, has provided as much a tempo as possible in the staging, but only Bud Knapp as the father, Joyce Gordon and Anna Reiser as the daughters-in-law, and Ken James and Gordon Pinsent as the ... sons, occasionally overcome their basically unconvincing roles.

The plot deals with "togetherness" in a contemporary Canadian household, and the loves, loyalties, sympathies and tensions arising therefrom. But the author doesn't quite clarify whatever his theme may be, or establish the characters as interesting or important.

Colin Winslow's single interior setting and the effective area lighting by Joseph Stell, are the best thing in the production. Huss.

Melbourne to Get New Legit and Film Theatre

Melbourne, May 21.

A theatre capable of legit and films is to be built in the basement of a seven-story car park soon to be built here. The site is now occupied by the Savoy Theatre, an old picture house playing mainly continental-type releases.

The proposed theatre will be capable of seating 675 people and will open as a film house but will have a stage large enough for live shows. Control windows and positions for television cameras also will be built into the theatre to allow shows to be taped live for Melbourne stations. Cameras will operate from the back and sides of the theatre to allow the audience an uninterrupted view of the show.

If the drinking regulations in the state of Victoria are relaxed, the theatre could become a night club with sit-down dining facilities. The need for a small independent theatre in Melbourne is obvious. Worthwhile productions at the St. Martin's Theatre, and the Union Theatre Repertory Co. attached to Melbourne Univ. fold simply because of commitments to present further productions, and no theatre available for a transfer.

Lawrence and Lee Cite 'Mame' for 5 Companies

Malibu, Cal.

Editor, VARIETY:

Regarding Harry Purvis's recent letter asking whether there have been any straight plays besides "Mary, Mary" in recent years having five simultaneous companies, there were five editions of "Auntie Mame" during 1958.

The original Broadway production moved to the Coast, with Eve Arden as star. Constance Bennett, Sylvia Sidney and Shirl Conway headed touring companies, while Beatrice Lillie starred in the English production. The troupe headed by Miss Sidney later played the N. Y. City Center, and Miss Conway toured Australia in our dramatization of the Patrick Dennis novel.

Standby Singers? Who Needs 'Em?

So Vienna Cancels 'Meistersinger' as Tenor Is "Ill"—Audience Burns

Vienna, May 21.

Tempers flared here when, seven minutes before curtain, the Staatsoper told a capacity audience there would be no "Meistersinger" because tenor Wolfgang Windgassen was "too sick." The scramble for refunds on the tickets was exasperating but efforts of some patrons to get ushers to refund the 30c paid for programs was a losing battle. The ushers never heard of such a nonsensical suggestion.

Next day the city buzzed with reactions. It was typical of bad planning, not protecting roles, absence of responsible management from the opera house. Facts came out. Tenor had not arrived in Vienna at noontime of the day of performance. A call to his home in Bavaria established his ignorance of being expected to sing that night. It was all negotiated weeks before by phone, never confirmed in writing.

Opera director Herbert von Karajan was on road the equally ... and the executive administrator, Erich Schenker, was recuperating from a heart attack. Result was a mixup of inefficiency and [illegible]. The Viennese were complaining that for once, or once again, it was all too much.

Seeking persons to blame, attention instead fell on the whole system which is intent to take singers from everywhere around the globe, instead of sticking to a local repertory company, nursing it, watching upcoming talent, encouraging young artists thereby building up a style and character for the ensemble as in former days. Worst fault of all is an organization which does not provide for a stand-by or understudy (the only available tenor that afternoon in the city was Rudolf Schock, heard last year with the American Opera Society in the "Merry Widow," who was rehearsing another opera and had not sung the part of Walter Stolzing in "Meistersinger" for four years).

Nobody in the opera's administrative offices seems to be disturbed if an artist appearing the same night is not in the city by noon. Only after the last train or plane has arrived without a singer, people seem to get a little confused. Only recently the scheduled Duke in "Rigoletto" cancelled and two Italian singers were called from Milan with the understanding that who arrived first would sing the part.

Minister of Education has sent an official message to Von Karajan, asking his return (after fulfilling his contractual obligations at the music festival in Prague) "to establish more clearly outlined duties and responsibilities in the running and administration of the opera house."

Ragotzys Set 18th Year At Augusta (Mich.) Barn

Jack Ragotzy and his actress-wife, Betty Ebert, left New York last week to ready their Barn Theatre at Augusta, Mich., for its 18th season of summer stock. The schedule starts June 2 with "Sunday in New York." The 400-seater was founded by the Ragotzys in 1946 and purchased in 1954. The building is a converted dairy barn.

Ragotzy, who'll direct 'Sunday,' has enlarged his company for the upcoming summer semester to a total of about 50. That includes the resident Equity company, technical and administrative personnel and apprentices. General manager Wayne Lamb, who also choreographs the musical productions, and associate director Louis Girard have been with the operation for 10 and seven years, respectively.

Newcomers to the staff this year include designer William King, associate director Mort Siegel and stage manager Ralph Strait.

DENY '64 WORLD'S FAIR NEED KILL MET DATES

Dallas, May 21.

Dallas figures in the Metropolitan Opera's tour plans for 1964, according to a statement issued by Francis Robinson, assistant manager, after many rumors had been heard that the current visit is the Metropolitan's swan song due to eastern involvements: the New York World's Fair and the removal to a new opera house in Lincoln Center.

The Met concluded one of their most successful visits to Dallas. Robinson pointed out that they are working on two schedules which would prevent the elimination of any city visited this season. One of these would involve lengthening the tour. The Met is committed to a two weeks' season in the New York World's Fair at the request of Fair authorities and Lincoln Center and comes after the first two weeks of the tour.

Frank Scully Honored

Frank Scully has been elected to the 50th Anniversary Honors List of Columbia University Graduate School of Journalism. A medal will be struck for the occasion.

Scully is a member of the famous class of 1917 which numbered among its members M. Lincoln Schuster, George E. Sokolsky, Merryle S. Rukeyser, Howard Dietz, Elliott Sanger, Morris Ryskind, Silas F. Seadler, Irwin Edman and Oscar Hammerstein 2d.

Scully's publishers recently released "In Armour Bright," the third of his autobiographical volumes—the two previous being "Cross My Heart" (1955) and "This Gay Knight" (1962). It is not stated if the committee's choice was based on his last book or his years as an author and VARIETY columnist. "In Armour Bright" is his 10th published book. Earlier ones included bestsellers like "Fun In Bed," a convalescent's handbook, and "Behind The Flying Saucers."

Convalescing from a fractured coccyx and a lung infection Scully expected a final medical checkup this week to release him for the trip to New York.

Only 3% of the school's student body in its half-century history have been honored with this medal, the letter from Dean Edward W. Barrett stated.

A 'Russian Pope'

Australian author Morris L. West's new book, "The Shoes of The Fisherman," to be published late this month, deals with the premise that the next Pope is a Russian who has been imprisoned for 17 years. "I finished the book last August and since then half a dozen major things in the novel have come true," West told a Honolulu interviewer.

His bestseller, "The Devil's Advocate," will be filmed this year, but West won't be involved in any way with the filming. The author said he fears that "creation by committee," as practiced in Hollywood, "can become a nightmare."

New German Film Mag

Within the various branches of the German show biz, that of the film is undoubtedly in poorest shape. It's a consequence of this unholy situation that the domestic film papers suffer too. In fact, quite a few German film mags and trade papers have folded within the past years. It's, therefore, the more surprising it, in critical times like that, a new German film mag is born. It's called Film, a rather highbrow publication published by Hans-Dieter Roos, a young Munich-based film critic of the reputable Sueddeutsche Zeitung, and Werner Schwier who has made himself a name via his German tv series, "It May Be Laughed," which features silent movies of comical (Chaplin, Keaton, etc.) calibre.

Both publishers have emphasized that in view of the fact that the German film is currently so much "down," their first issues will chiefly dedicate themselves to the foreign film.

McGraw-Webster Consolidate

McGraw-Hill Pub Co., Inc., a New York company, has consolidated Webster Pub Co. Inc., of Missouri, the former surviving, for conduct of a printing-publishing business in New York City. Authorized capital stock is $14,305,940, consisting of 156,970 shares of preferred, at $10 par value, and 12,000,000 shares of common at $1 par value. White & Case were filing attorneys at Albany.

Barrie Museum

After being closed to the public for two years, the birthplace in Kirriemuir, Scotland, of playwright Sir James M. Barrie, author of "Peter Pan," etc., has been formally reopened.

The tiny two-story house has been repaired and renovated, and an adjoining house has been incorporated to make way for more Barrie relics.

The famous washhouse in the back yard, which was Barrie's first theatre and also the inspiration of the Wendy House in "Peter Pan," is preserved in its original state, complete with a characteristic wooden washtub.

A J. M. Barrie Parlor has been furnished in mid-19th century style, including mementos of the author—spectacles, pipe, tobacco tin, passport, photographs, etc.

On long-term loan is the original typescript of "Peter Pan," with Barrie's ms corrections. Several bound mss of "The Old Lady Shows Her Medals" and "The New Word" have also been loaned.

Station officials say that the pension and off-camera disagreements are entirely apart from AFTRA's granting of waiver rights to permit the taping of the Douglas show for other WBC outlets.

Both sides apparently are standing pat, although some hope is expressed that the talks can be reopened. Rumors that the 90-minute stanza would be transferred to Los Angeles, where the Steve Allen production is located, have been reported, but appear unfounded.

It had been KYW-TV's hopes to put the 90-minute show into other Westinghouse television afternoon programming.

The newspaper assigned five reporters to the story, and the station contributed three plus its No. 1 cityside man Hugh Hill and a camera crew. They worked cooperatively and, amazingly, both teams were able to develop the story in total secrecy for two months without a leak. The station used private automobiles rather than its news wagons so as not to attract attention.

$125,000 to mount and, with this figure included, will cost Fiberglass $450,000 in total outlay by the end of its 21-city tour.

Del Ladd, Fiberglass marketing v.p., estimates that the company wrote upwards of $800,000 in business in 66 hours while the show was in Boston, a tally the company directly attributes to the presentation. The $450,000 total budget is an average one for a pitch of this scope.

Fiberglass show was produced by Cellomatic Industrial Productions, a subsidiary of Screen Gems, in turn a subsid of Columbia Pictures. Tom Howell, Cellomatic v.p., estimates that upwards of 50-75 major industrial productions are produced annually, with the total constantly increasing. He refers to only those shows of $100,000 or more. Cellomatic is currently in the treatment stage on four such shows while other firms like Wilding, Jerry Fielding, Jam Handy, MPO and others are humming too.

More business firms are involved in this field than ever before, Howell points out. Figures for 1961, compiled by the Journal of the American Society of Motion Picture and Tv Engineers, indicate that $415,000,000 was spent that year for non-theatrical films and audio-visual presentations. This total represents an increase of one-third over the $300,000,000 estimated for 1958. Included in the 1961 figure were $127,000,000 for production; $90,000,000 for release prints; $100,000,000 for distribution; $37,000,000 for filming equipment and $62,000,000 for other audio-visual equipment.

The survey showed that the largest category in this medium was business and industry which spent $82,000,000 for production and $201,000,000 for all film and audio-visual purposes. Of the estimated 8,500 non-theatrical pix produced in 1961, the survey indicates, 5,100 were by and for industry. Biggest individual factors in the medium, with an investment annually ranging from $4,000,000 to $8,200,000, were reported to be General Motors, Ford, Standard Oil of New Jersey and American Telephone.

As this business has developed, so have the salaries it pays. Resultantly, according to Howell and Charles Scheuer, Cellomatic's project coordinator, more and more stage and pix performers, writers, directors et al have been drawn into the field. Some name actors rate $25,000 for a one-shot appearance or, if by the week, $5,000 salary (Equity minimum is $200 weekly for such work but most everyone makes over scale, they claim.)

Industrial production has stayed in the eastern part of the country, mainly because vaudeville, cafe and legit people are used and also because industrial film studio technique differs from Hollywood. It's a lot faster. Coast producers have been eyeing the field, however, and spokesmen have been vocal in their desire to get in on the gravy.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Palm Springs.

What's a classic? The herra profs have fancy definitions about universality of appeal and a test of time. Would, under these terms, a song which everybody seems to be singing for 60 years qualify? I am referring of course to old "Bill Bailey" and the importunings of his femme that he please come home. I first heard the song in the cakewalk era of entertainment at North Beach, Long Island, a junior grade Coney Island on Bowery Bay washed by the garbage of Riker's Island and long since transformed into a part of La Guardia Field.

It was in a day which vaude bills ran all week in beer parlors of seaside summer resorts. These were large and airy frame buildings, seating perhaps 300. They were swept by ocean breezes and rarely with a broom.

Trolley tourists sat around tables on which stood a few stale sandwiches. The provender was there to comply with the law which allowed such bierstuben to remain open on Sunday provided they served food as well as beer.

Ehret's Brewery had a monopoly on all places serving beer on North Beach. It was in a day of free enterprise and Jake Ruppert couldn't have moved in with the Yankees and Dutch Schultz, on account there were no Yankees or Dutch Schultz at the time.

Ehret's Brewery was on East 92d Street. There was a ferry from the foot of this street to Astoria. Trolleys ran from there to North Beach. They terminated at the south end of North Beach. Trolley cars of the B.R.T. brought people from Brooklyn to the north end. Near each terminal was a beer and vaude hall, both owned by a guy whose name I think was Charlie Erb. Anyway, he served Ehret's beer, stale sandwiches and fresh entertainment.

The acts were clean, the bills standard. Acrobats, song and dance teams, quartets (Avon, Four Messenger Boys, Bison City) serious next-to-closing skits and supper acts, made up the bills.

Kids were not barred, except possibly for lacking a dime for a drink and being too young to drink. They developed a skill of sorts in overcoming these obstacles. They would hang around the wide-doored entrance and as people came out, sneak in and occupy the chairs and act sort of passive over the half-empty beer mugs and the stale sandwiches.

Waiters and cops would not give kids like us the heave-ho if we did not drink the stale beer or touch the staler sandwiches. As I look back on them now, I realize they must have been warmhearted fathers themselves.

Bill Bailey And His Fine Tooth Comb

As early as the summer of 1903 I remember hearing Mrs. Bailey confessing she heaved Bill out of their home with nothing but a fine tooth comb. A fine tooth comb was something we understood. Heads were combed with these instruments on the hunt for aliens among the locks. I haven't seen a fine tooth comb in years but for Bill Bailey to get the bum's rush with nothing ·· ·e to spruce up his morale than such a comb was something we understood. A fine tooth comb and a rainy evening. Poor guy. Not even a stale sandwich to look at.

Somehow, I always thought Bill Bailey a Negro, but research does not seem to confirm this. The fact that today Pearl Bailey has a brother named Bill Bailey and has made a family act out of the song merely means that Negro-singers like the song. Blues, loneliness, rain and moanin' all night long, they understand and so they understand Mrs. Bailey's begging that Bill please come home.

There was an ill-founded legend that the Bailey in question was the partner of P. T. Barnum and there have been Bill Baileys reported as bartenders in Calcutta, Hong Kong, Tahiti and Cairo—all of course the original.

If any of them is the original Bill Bailey he must be as old as Winnie Churchill because Hughie Cannon wrote the song at the turn of the century and it was published by Howley, Haviland and D. in 1902. The Dresser end of the company Paul Dresser whose real name was Dreiser. He was a brother of Theodore Dreiser.

The first performer to sing "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" was John Queen, a burnt cork artist who sang it in "Town Topics," a farce comedy which opened in Newburgh, New York, in 1902.

According to S. E. Ring, the Hollywood librarian of big time and small time vauders and their songs, Cannon made so much money on Bill Bailey he went broke and tried to recover his losses with a new song which reversed the picture. In this one Bill Bailey had become prosperous and Mrs. Bailey was pleading with him for that reason to please come home. That one didn't go so well and a whole raft of imitators never had the success of the original either.

Romo Vincent reports that Bill Bailey was an old Negro friend of Hughie Cannon's and that Hughie Cannon wrote another song which Johnny Queen sang called "I Wonder Why Bill Bailey Don't Come Home?"

The original is now in the public domain and as a p.d. tune you probably have heard it as a jingle for all sorts of commercials but with new lyrics. Everything from Rambler cars to Chex, the cereal with the micronite filter, has cashed in on Cannon's heirs.

No doubt the one who has made the money on the song in recent years has not been Jimmy Durante or Ella Fitzgerald or Della Reese or Pearl Bailey, but Allan Sherman. His version in "My Son, The Folk Singer" is called, "Won't You Come Home, Disraeli?" It is a rather ribald comment by Queen Victoria that her prime minister stop gadding around in Egypt, Pompeii and Rome, and has a line, "I ain't so certain, you're not the 19th century Richard Burton, Disraeli won't you please come home." (There was, of course, a Sir Richard Burton, an oriental student in the 19th century.)

I don't know how that parody will go in England where queens, even long dead, especially queens like Victoria who was the soul of virtue, are among the untouchables. How will they take to lines like

> Now don't leave me flat,
> The key to the Palace is under the mat,
> Disraeli, won't you please come home?

But on this side of the Atlantic it is about the funniest of Sherman's parodies.

Parodies are not hard to do. You can take,

> Some disenchanted evening
> You may find your husband
> Across an empty room.

Or

> When your hair has turned to silver
> I'll Clairol you just the same.

Or

> I left Bret Harte
> In Sausolito.

Or

> When Arab I's are snarling
> Israeli's on alert.

Or

> With a shine on my shoes,
> And a melody in my heart,
> What a helluva way to date Miss Day.

Tunes keep rolling off the keyboards and if they become hits they have a ready-made audience for kidding. The only ones who have valid objections to parodies are the lyric writers of the originals and even they might be persuaded to kid their own songs, if the price is right.

China's Plentiful Live Entertainment

"importance" of the program. (Your reporter regrets admitting his ignorance, fact remains that he doesn't know the value of fens and yuans as translated into European or American currency. Allegedly a dollar is equal to a yuan, but the transaction is difficult and complicated. If you know how, you can buy yuans for half their value or less. If you don't know how, they can cost more.)

Theatres are always full and tickets are virtually never available despite everything government officials say about their "easy" availability. This is a phenomenon which is equally startling to Occidentals in all Communist countries, Russia included. It is partially explained by the fact that theatre tickets are often given to factory workers or other State employees as gifts or prizes.

Grosses are not important, as they are in capitalist countries — success or failure is judged by the number of attendees (and/or applause) rather than in cash take-in.

There are no company managers, though there are numerous bookkeepers. The latter are not necessarily members of the theatre world, they are government employees assigned to add and subtract numbers—one day in a factory, one day in a store, one day in a theatre. Blocks of seats are also held out regularly for last-minute visiting firemen, whether visitors from abroad or local political dignitaries.

Repertory Galore

Repertory is the rule in all theatres, with almost daily changes of program. Usually, drama, opera, ballet, vaudeville, circus, etc., are intermingled. Judging by applause, audiences most enjoy singers of "classics." These singers are almost always elderly, with scratchy, reedy voices. The quality of the voice doesn't bother anybody (or maybe it does have meaning for the locals, values are different) but what counts is the songs—reminders of the "good old days." This would be a strange contradiction if it were not carefully pointed out by Communist leaders that what is meant by "good old days" are the days before "capitalists" spoiled life.

Clowns Always Popular

Second in audience appreciation are the clowns, very popular with the masses.

There are frequent plays and ballets (especially the latter) dramatising Communist battles, victories, struggles, etc. These are received by most audiences apathetically, and rarely get any applause. The Communists say, "One does not applaud, vulgarly, things one respects highly." Which is one way of looking at it, of course.

The Chinese believe firmly that their stage entertainment is technically on a par with entertainment elsewhere in the world, if not better. Actually, their stage equipment, electrical equipment, scenery, etc., is 30 years or more behind the times and is not at all comparable to stagecraft elsewhere. But admittedly the performers themselves are frequently very highly trained and competent. Judging by the few examples of Chinese theatre which have penetrated the Occidental world, their dancers, singers and musicians are remarkable. As to their dramaturgy, apart from the propaganda plays, it is virtually impossible for a non-Oriental to judge it, it is so "different." Almost always, it is a melange of fantasy, symbolism, mime and chant. It has some affinity, but not entirely with Japanese "No." It is virtually impossible to translate or adapt it into European terms. (Or American, of course.)

Students of Chinese theatre say that the standard "classic" repertory consists of about 15,000 plays. Every actor of repute knows somewhere between 200 to 300 of these and most audiences recognize most of them and have seen most of them many times. (Not the youngsters, of course, but the "liberation" of China came in 1948, so that there are still a goodly number of adults in China who were brought up in the tradition.)

For the past five years the government has made a determined effort to "rejuvenate" the classic theatre. More than a hundred "famous" oldtime actors of repute who had dropped out because of lack of work or old-age have been recruited and put to work "teaching" the new generation of actors. For the first 10 years or so after the "liberation" this type of theatre was pushed aside, frowned upon by some of the more militant members of the government. Now they are fully and formally solicited and "officially" recognized.

One of the big problems is that the traditional plays have never been written down or published. They were handed down from actor to actor. Now the government is working very hard with film and tape, hoping to have authentic records with which to continue. Even so, it is claimed, about half of the classical repertory has been lost forever. Those who still remember some of the words, some of the action, do not remember the gests, the intonations, the movements which — in drama of this sort—is all-important.

Government aid (as in all Communist economies) is available to students of theatre. On application, and after passing a test, students (of whatever age or sex) have to sign up for an eight-year course. Tuition, housing and food are all gratis. The government also provides the students with two suits a year, one haircut a month and 10 yuans (theoretically $10) a month for personal expenses. Habitation is, of course, in dormitories. Classes take up only half of the students' time.

One fourth the study time is devoted to gymnasium, since athletics is an important function in Chinese theatre, and one-fourth for intra-class performances.

Students (or apprentices, as they are called) work approximately eight hours a day. When graduated and assigned to a theatre company, they work seven hours a day—or, rather, are not permitted to work more than seven hours a day, whether onstage or in rehearsal. They both can, of course, work more than that on their own, for studies, etc. One day a week, usually Monday, is free. Theatres often are open seven days a week, but in that case, performers alternate on a six-day basis.

Propaganda Also

More than incidentally, one hour a day (whether for students or graduate actors, and this goes even for the most important "stars"), is devoted to "notes" by the political secretary who is attached to each group. This functionary explains the Marxist meanings of the day, the play, etc., even though the play has no actual political import. This hour is deducted from the seven or eight hour schedule.

Also, all students and all actors, must go to performances by other companies than their own on a schedule arranged by their "teachers." All "premieres" of new productions are restricted to students and unemployed actors. "Unemployed" does not mean out of work, since all are on government payroll, but, rather, not currently in a play, or on night off.

Theoretically only two months is permitted for the rehearsal of a new play. Actually, it usually takes about three months. But time is not too important. If a new play opens and the audience (all pros) finds it "unsatisfactory" it goes back into rehearsal. It must be passed and acceptable to its "premiere" audience before it is made available to the public at large.

Transportation to and from the theatre is always provided for actors, via bus. Celibates and "oldsters" live in dormitories provided by the government. Married couples have lodgings of a more private nature, also provided by the government. Clothes, costumes and makeup are provided by the government. There is a salary for all actors on a varying official scale which doesn't amount to much but is sufficient for all their needs or so says the government. The top salary is 2,000 yuans monthly, which is reached by virtually no one, though there are about 20 actors now on the 2,000 level.

There is no income tax to pay.

The importance and esteem which is given to actors in the Chinese Communist setup is indicated by the above sums, as compared to the politicos. The big boss of China, Mao, allegedly is paid only 1,000 yuans per month. (But you just can't ignore his fringe benefits).

Costumes and scenery are all built in a mammoth central setup in the town of Soochow and frequently are remarkably lavish. Since costumes are especially important in Chinese classic productions, the total expended on their manufacture frequently is higher than the cost of the company. Also, actors frequently change costumes during an evening of play, thus wearing more clothes onstage than off, in their private lives.

Luxury is generally frowned upon, but actors are considered "special" people. The more important actors are permitted to have servants—if they can afford them.

'Opera' a Loose Term

There are about 25 major theatres in Peking, all with large seating capacity. Of this number about 15 are devoted exclusively to opera. (The word "opera" is a misnomer, since Chinese opera is a melange of vaudeville, acrobatics, mime, etc. The Peking Opera Co., which toured most of the world, but not the United States, a couple of seasons ago, was composed of members picked from all the Peking houses.)

It is difficult to pin statistics down, since definitions are not the same. The word "theatre" in China apparently is a misnomer, too, since it seems to include assembly halls, forums, etc. There are a number of theatres in Peking, for instance, in which the entertainment consists entirely of speeches or conferences. Like all Communists, the Chinese apparently love to talk.

There are thousands of "theatres" in the country; outside of the main cities, there is hardly a village or agricultural centre in which one cannot find a "theatre" or "cultural centre." There are about 200 traveling "opera" companies, many of them with first-rank talent, and touring constantly. Curiously enough, the percentage of oldtimers in these touring companies is higher than in Peking proper.

Allegedly apprentice actors, after finishing, are supposed to go on tour for a few years. But this hasn't worked out because audiences in the wilderness have made the most determined beef for "classic" plays and have beefed hardest against "new" (or propaganda) amusement.

There are still a few wandering minstrels, not working for the State and unofficially recognized. Usually they consist of two or three persons who set up a tent in village squares and entertain with "song and dance." Mostly this is corny stuff, likely to be erotic in nature. Customers stand around, or sit on the ground nearby, and watch, occasionally dropping coins for the entertainers. It is hard to believe they garner enough to keep alive—but obviously they do, since they exist. The government frowns on these gypsies, but does not bother to harass them.

No plays from "democratic" countries are ever shown, not even in translation or adaptation. No plays from Communist Russia, Yugoslavia or elsewhere, for that matter, although the Bolshoi Ballet from Moscow and some other dance troupes from other Communist countries have appeared for short tours in Peking. Chinese cultural officials say there is no possible question of spoken drama from the Occidental world. "Our people could not possibly understand or accept them," is the opinion. As to ballet troupes—they are accepted as "novelties" but, say the officials "our people don't really like them."

"No Decision," later produced. Second prize winning author on that occasion, David Ballantyne, is also serving up one for this skein. Regular tv and picture scriptwriter Lewis Greifer is acting as a script adviser-assistant, though probably without public credit.

All the shows will be VTR'd at the ATV studios at Elstree and the first three are apparently already in the can. "We thought," said Stella Richman, "that the public would probably go for a weekly ration of unabashed love. Its about time we all came out of that kitchen sink and combed our hair."

Black Gold

light of marquee billing but have had some experience, theatrical and/or television. This kind of vehicle will not catapult them to stardom but nonetheless they suggest promise.

Story line and production technique are plain old-fashioned, being another one about wildcatters versus the oil baron in Oklahoma a few decades back, and it's not difficult to guess who gets both girl and gusher at the end.

Screenplay by Bob and Wanda Duncan springs no surprises and and Leslie H. Martinson's direction might have gotten it on screen in less time. The 98 minutes of celluloid allows for too much lull between lusty action. Martinson does handily with barroom roughhouse and melodramatic catastrophe at the well; dull stretches in between are damaging to pace and impact.

Philip Carey, James Best and Claude Akins are the virile men of the southwest, and the ladies who wind up properly with the right men are Miss McBain and Miss Spain. Akins, the heavy, a robust, handsome personality, A-noles in the arms of the sheriff.

A Cause, A Cause D'Une Femme

(Because, Because of a Woman)

(FRENCH)

Paris, May 14.

Fernand Rivers release of Rivers production. Stars Jacques Charrier, Marie Laforet, Jill Haworth, Juliette Mayniel, Mylene Demongeot, Odile Versois. Directed by Michel Deville. Screenplay, Nina Companeez, Deville; camera, Claude Lecomte; editor, Nina Companeez. At Balzac, Paris. Running time, [illegible] MINS.

Remy	Jacques Charrier
Agathe	Marie Laforet
Cecilia	Jill Haworth
Chloe	Juliette Mayniel
Lisette	Mylene Demongeot
Nathalie	Odile Versois
Johann	Helmut Griem
Maid	Yvonne Monlaur

Situation comedy deals with a ladies' man caught up on a murder charge and on the run. It has a neat style, pleasant characters and plotting. But it is somewhat overlong with the overactive desire to please by all concerned watering down its impact. But some foreign playoff aspects are there if pruned a bit, plus specialized situations on its general grace.

Accused of murder the hero, Jacques Charrier, takes it on the lam. A host of pretty girls help him clear himself. In the interim he really falls in love. However, there is no comeuppance involved and he goes merrily on his way. Comedy is padded out with love scenes and okay light characterisations.

Charrier is personable but does not quite have the lightness and charm to make his central role airy enough to accept all the women falling at his feet. He is somewhat too plodding to give the role the drive it needs.

Mylene Demongeot cuts a diverting bit as the light-headed, big-hearted girl. Jill Haworth has the proper porcelain childish quality as the doll wife the hero loves. Others are good. Director Michel Deville displays a neat personal touch but has yet to find the right tone of situation comedy, with the right blend of personage insight and sustained narrative.

The pic is sometimes taking but without the firm handling to keep it diverting throughout. Some punch and timing should have Deville emerging one of the staple comedy directors here. Mosk.

Die Endlose Nacht

(The Endless Night)

(GERMAN)

Berlin, May 14.

Atlas-Film (Hanns Eckelkamp) release of Will Tremper production, in collaboration with Inter West Film (Wenzel Luedecke) and Hanns Eckelkamp. Features Karin Hubner, Harald Leipnitz, Louise Martini, Paul Esser, Wolfgang Spier. Directed and written by Will Tremper. Camera, Hans Jura; music, Peter Thomas; editor, [illegible]. Previewed at Airport Tempelhof, West Berlin. Running time, 84 MINS.

Lisa	Karin Hubner
Wolfgang Spitz	Harald Leipnitz
J. H. Schreiber	Paul Esser
Marsha	Louise Martini
Dr. Achtel	Wolfgang Spier
Herbert	Werner Peters
Silvia Stroed	Hannelore Elsner

Will Tremper rates as one of the few outsiders among German filmmakers. Although he doesn't classify himself "a new waver," he picks unconventional subjects and his films usually have no big stars or big budgets. Two years ago, he directed "Flight to Berlin," which tackled a "boxoffice poison" subject—the divided Germany. Film received kudos but flopped at the b.o. His new film, "The Endless Night," also a rather unconventional (made without prepared script and shot nearly entirely in the huge despatching room of West Berlin airport Tempelhof), may face the same fate.

"Night," which Tremper wrote, directed and produced in collab with Berlin's Wenzel Luedecke and Hanns Eckelkamp of Atlas-Film distributing company (Duisburg), departs from the ordinary feature-type of film. It's just a series of episodes of people stranded at Berlin's airport Tempelhof because of bad weather conditions.

Tremper shows his ability in regard to dialog and brief realistic sequences and that he has an observing eye. What goes against the film's general impression is that he concentrates too much on sex. Nearly all the episodes told here, directly or indirectly, have too much of it, be it unfaithfulness, seduction or flirt. Film, for German standards, has its true merits. But for the foreign market, it appears too talky and also perhaps too sketchy. Hans.

The Sex Criminal

(SWISS)

Zurich, May 12.

Praesens-Film A.G. Zurich release of Praesens (Lazar Wechsler) production. [illegible] Running time, 94 MINS.

(In German and Swiss dialect)

A universal theme, that of sex aberration, adults preying on children and under-age adolescents of both sexes, is the basis of this latest Swiss release. Assertedly based on actual cases from the files of the Zurich police, it is, in all, a commendable effort with an air of authenticity and lack of melodramatic histrionics as assets. However, lack of punch and artistic finesse limits playoff. There are four episodes illustrating different aspects of psychopathic passions. Treatment often appears wooden and contrived. Flat German and Swiss dialog and uneven performances contribute to the lackluster overall impression.

Opening sequence shows a five-year-old girl being abused by an unknown who is brought to justice thanks to an immediate police report leading to a painstaking tracking-down of the culprit via fingerprints and other clues. Done in semi-documentary style, it offers interesting insights into criminal police methods. However, flashes from an operation of voluntary castration are in bad taste and add an unnecessary shock element. Second episode concerns a sexually frustrated young peasant whose abuse of a little girl remains unreported due to the family's "influence" in the village. A repeat of the crime is prevented at the last minute when the people finally speak up.

Third sequence is about a homosexual's seduction of a teenage boy. He is acquitted at first since denying the guilt and having had no witnesses. The boy is thus stamped a liar until the prosecutor, convinced of his truthfulness, brings the case back to court and manages to have the pervert convicted. Case four shows the seduction of a 14-year-old girl by her stepfather who threatens her not to betray him. The truth is brought to light via contrived coincidences, and the whole sequence appears the most implausible and least convincing in spite of the basic premise's plausibility.

A firmer directorial hand would have been needed to make this entry come off. As it is, it stands little chance for international consumption. Camera work, in black-and-white, is conventional, and editing is okay. Mezo.

OBITUARIES

TEX O'ROURKE

Tex O'Rourke, 77, chief jester and roastmaster with the Circus Saints and Sinners, a club famed for lampooning celebrated guests it invites to its luncheons, died May 14 in New York following surgery. A tall Texan, he ribbed notables ranging from ex-Presidents Truman and Eisenhower to the late financial tycoon Robert R. Young.

Of colorful heritage, O'Rourke was a native of Ysleta, Tex. His mother was a circus artist and his father a strapping U.S. marshall. In his younger days, O'Rourke was a boxer who learned the art under the tutelage of Bob Fitzsimmons.

He also was a soldier of fortune who participated in Latin-American revolutions for "a little excitement and a little dough." For a time he was a sports promoter, trouped in Wild West shows, toured the lecture circuit and played the calliope.

There are no immediate survivors.

CAROL REES SHULMAN

Carol Rees Shulman, 41, wife of the magazine, book and television writer, Max Shulman, was found dead in the couple's home at Westport, Conn., May 17. An autopsy established that death was due to natural causes. She was the mother of four children.

Her father, Lee Rees, has represented VARIETY in Minneapolis for over 30 years and her brother, Robert, is currently doing the same.

PAUL CLARKE

May 20, 1960

"Thou shalt share my roof and store and morning.
I shall not forget."

CAROLINE ELLIS

Mrs. Caroline Crockett Ellis, 65, regional and network radio personality for over 20 years, died May 17 in Richland, Kans. Once a teacher, then a farm wife, later a department store worker, she began in radio in 1933 as writer-narrator of a show on KMBC for one of the leading Kansas City department stores.

She went to WHO, Des Moines, in 1936 to initiate a new show, "Caroline's Golden Store," for Montgomery Ward on a regional network. A couple of years later she went national on CBS for General Mills, even then being well into her mature years. She returned to Kansas City in the early 1940's, and took up a commentary show intended to be sustaining. Her knack for good sense in her continuity and copy soon made the program commercial.

Mrs. Ellis closed her radio career narrating a weekly dramatized show, "Of Health and Happiness," for Blue Cross and the Area Hospital Assn. in the mid 1950's.

Her husband died of cancer in 1954. Three nephews survive.

WIN BROOKS

Win Brooks, 61, executive editor of the Boston Record American Sunday Advertiser, died Sunday (12), of cancer. He was the author of one novel, which was a Literary Guild selection, and many short fiction stories. His fiction and poems appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, the North American Revue, Women's Day and other publications. "The Shining Tides" was the title of his bestselling novel of 1952.

Brooks joined the Hearst newspaper in 1917, and his newspaper career embraced service as a reporter, rewrite man, city editor, managing editor and finally, executive editor. He was named managing editor of the Boston American in 1950 and executive editor of the Record American Sunday Advertiser in October, 1961.

Surviving are his wife, son, four daughters, two sisters and three brothers.

charges. This, it's said, has had the effect of either driving local filmmakers out of the country or causing them to cease operations in the December-through-March period. A vote by the citizen-group opposition toward its passage has been registered.

The second committee approach is the generalized one in Washington where the Hollywood delegation met last week with Asst Labor Secretary George L. P. Weaver. Pat Somerset, president of the Hollywood AFL Film Council, and Al Chamie, secretary-treasurer of the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, stated "Definite progress has been made in our Government's study of possible measures to relieve unemployment and economic distress in the domestic motion picture production industry. . . ."

The Hollywood group was asked by Weaver to return within 30 days to provide additional information on the runaway matter.

is that they feel that the hostility to unions engendered by the showing of the film is not overcome by a NLRB decision or even a new election. One union attorney said acrimoniously "There's no way of getting that kind of poison out of their mind short of totally brainwashing them."

'Anatomy of Lie'

At least two unions, the Machinists and the Teamsters have been using a rebuttal film called "The Anatomy of a Lie." It undertakes to expose "Women" as a distortion of facts. Labor leaders have been less than enthusiastic about its effect as an antidote.

As a result of the four NLRB rulings upsetting elections, in which companies used "Women," the unions are advocating immediate union recognition where the film is used prior to an organizational election, or, failing this, a firm NLRB rule that "Women" must be shown on a double bill with "Anatomy."

"And Women Will Weep" is a 22-minute color film produced by the National Right To Work committee in 1960. It allegedly dramatically portrays a bitter 116-day strike against a company in Princeton, Ind., in 1957. The NLRB's most recent statement said that the film is not a documentary, "but a staged production based on a contrived script, played by professional actors, and put together so as to achieve the maximum dramatic and emotional impact."

The Board report further states "The professional acting is smooth and extremely lifelike. In fact, the entire production is so well conceived that the ordinary viewer is likely to consider it representing the factual truth. The panel majority concluded that sophisticated audiences might recognize that the film in question was propaganda. Such films are not meant for sophisticated audiences.

Labor lawyers are baffled as to how to handle what they consider filmic "McCarthyism." "If we made a picture as slanted and as emotional as 'And Women Will Weep'," a union barrister said, "they'd haul us before the Un-American Activities Committee. As it is now, the NLRB quite righteously gives us a new lock for the barn door after after the horses are gone."

Political Washington Practices Valor Of Discretion Re L'Affaire Elizabeth III

Washington, May 28.

Washington's high society, which is largely pegged on political position, is giving "Cleopatra" what amounts to a big snub.

The implication seems clear that most politicians of lofty rank are avoiding association with the Elizabeth Taylor-Richard Burton film.

The June 26 premiere at the Warner Theatre is a $50-$25-$15 benefit for the International Rescue Committee, a 30-year-old respected charity. Yet, no one kin to President Kennedy, Vice President Johnson or any member of the U.S. Supreme Court has lent a name to the sponsorship. It is, in fact, considerably more interesting who is not associated with the preem than who is.

First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy is, of course, expecting a baby and has curtailed social activity. But she has many times given her name as "honorary chairman" of large benefits which she did not personally attend. She declined doing it in this case. Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson and the Chief Justice's wife, Mrs. Earl Warren, did not consent to participate.

The invitations are out. Co-chairmen of the sponsoring committee are Mrs. Angier Biddle Duke, wife of the State Dept's chief of protocol who is reported in line for an ambassadorship in Africa soon, and Mrs. Claiborne Pell, wife of the junior Democratic Senator from Rhode Island. Mrs. Duke, the former Robin Chandler, was once a regular panelist on

Secret Screening Of Terrorist Film; Shows Algerians in Torment

Cannes, May 28.

A picture banned by the French government was secretly shown during the Cannes festival last week. It is "October in Paris" and deals with the protests by Algerian demonstrators during that month in 1961.

The film, sponsored by the Maurice Audin Committee (named after a young mathematician who was strangled to death) was made by a crew of 23 who worked without pay in their free time. It has a running time of 70 minutes and is a combination of newsreel clips, still photographs, firsthand testimonies by Algerians and shots of the cellars where Algerians were tortured.

Although banned in France, and in spite of the fact that one print has already been seized by the French authorities, the film is being shown on occasional Sunday mornings in different theatres and has also been distributed to private clubs. Invites to the screen-

Music Festivals Amok; France Alone Lists 217

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Bordeaux, May 28.

Annual mad parade of music festivals is on. As always, Bordeaux leads off, with a fine line-up of musical events which lasts three weeks. There are 217 music festivals listed for France alone, this year. When you add Switzerland, Germany, Austria, Italy, etc., you begin to have an idea of the enormity of this sector of show business. And it's not a peanut business. Individual artists are being paid higher fees by a dozen or more of the French music festivals than they normally get in concert halls. Names such as Byron Janis, Henryk Szeryng, Van Cliburn, Yehudi Menhin and Nathan Millstein are sprinkled around and—which is more important — the customers are coming.

Bordeaux, at the moment, is jam-packed. You have to bribe your way into a hotel room. Two weeks before the opening night

MALIBU TRACT'S NEW FRONTYARD

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

As token of the sincerity of their intention to create a new, modernized super-studio in the smog-free Malibu Beach tract beyond Hollywood, the three cooperating companies, 20th-Fox, Metro and Columbia, are purchasing for about $800,000 an additional adjoining 75 acres, presently a cattle ranch owned by W. C. and E. J. Richards. This will give the existing 2,237-acre film site frontage to the Freeway and Las Virgenes Road, escaping the winding road approach into the tract now under county control. The investment is also a presumed answer to those skeptics who, following the original story, called it a "pipe dream."

Trade thinking in New York has increasingly foreshadowed continued use of costly Los Angeles realty acreage by half-idle, overhead-haunted studios as doomed to erasure. There has been general discussion of the Malibu idea in terms of a flight from ground values, taxes, idle stages, unscientifically planned

Fed Wants Less Fest Shopping For 'Extra' Pix

Cannes, May 28.

Under updated Federation of International Film Producer Association's rulings, strongly backed by the U.S. via the Motion Picture Assn., the competitive festival's right to "invite" additional pix to the one official entry may be curtailed. This applies to the big producing countries, making over 70 features per year, which have the right to more than one entry.

The last two years the big producing countries like the U.S., Great Britain, France, Italy, West Germany, have usually been content to pick one official pic and allow the fest to choose one or more others. But it was felt it turned into the fest representatives shopping around too much to secure star attendance.

Now the Selection Committees in each country would select one and recommend other eligibles. It remains to be seen if the fests will go along with this and other FIFPA rulings like the 12 day rule, still ignored.

Other numerically-large producing countries like Japan, Russia and India usually are content with one pic. India did not even send one to the 1963 Cannes Film Fest.

Peak Demand for Names to Come In Fall With TV, Niteries Heavy Bidding

Talent agencies will face a king-sized headache in the fall when allocating acts between an unprecedented number of variety shows on television and the normal cafe outlets. They anticipate that the demand for names will hit a new peak because of the pressures of both media.

Indications point to the possibility that there will be 18 variety shows on television next season, as well as several specials which will also require a supply of names. In the roster are the Ed Sullivan Show, Garry Moore, Bell Telephone, Jimmy Dean, Judy Garland, Danny Kaye, Jerry Lewis, Johnny Carson, Sid Caesar, Red Skelton, Jack Benny, Steve Allen, Jack Paar, Andy Williams, Jackie Gleason, Mitch Miller, Edie Adams and the possibility that "Hootenanny" will continue in the fall. Specials include six shows by Perry Como, several by Bob Hope and Bing Crosby.

This list comprises more vaudeo shows than the percenteries have had to cope with in years. Adding to the problems will be the clearance issue. This will prohibit an agency from booking any performer on more than one teleshow a month because of a 21 days before and seven days after clearance demanded by virtually every vid producer.

On top of this will be the niteries which will require their normal allotment of talent plus fresh

Montreal Bids To Overseas Celebs For June Fest

By CHARLES LAZARUS

Montreal, May 28.

Reflecting the impact of foreign and off-beat films on the Montreal market, the fourth annual Montreal International Film Festival, should manifest a number of firsts:

(1.) A Czech Film Week at the Comedie Canadienne theatre June 14-20.

(2.) Foreign stars, critics, producers, directors, film company execs and other film VIP's from abroad, are being invited to attend.

(3.) "Festival of Canadian Films" will be part of program.

(4.) "A new multiple-screen process consisting of 13 screens will be demonstrated to the Montreal public for the first time." It is the co-op invention of Roman Kroitor and other National Film Board technicians.

A particularly significant "first,"

L.A. County Assessor Told 'Cleopatra' Negative Was Brought in for $28-Mil

Hollywood, May 28.

Twentieth-Fox as of March 1 notified the L.A. County Assessor's office that "Cleopatra" cost $28,000,000, it was learned over the weekend.

A spokesman for 20th-Fox reported that the figure reported for tax assessment purposes did not include the "false start" in London, which had to be trashed, and amounted to between $4,000,000 and $5,000,000. This, he explained, will be included for accounting purposes in the final cost of picture.

Since the $28,000,000 figure was reported on March 1, he noted, not included were all post-production costs, such as editing, scoring, etc., plus cost of advertising campaign and color prints and certain other charges.

Reno-Sparks-Tahoe Cafes Set Huge Name Slate to Woo Summer Tourist

Rome, May 28.

Clubs in the Reno-Sparks-Tahoe circle have lined up a talent slate for the summer season—it officially opens Memorial Day—that'll offer a wide variety of entertainment, and most of it is chosen from the top echelon of nitery names.

Fourteen major clubs in the area bill live entertainment with the usual policy being from dusk to dawn. Hurrah's Club in Reno features an around-the-clock entertainment schedule. And some clubs' live talent is offered in more than one room.

Reno's entertainment buyers include Harrah's, Harolds, Mapes Hotel, Holiday Hotel, Golden Hotel, Primadonna, and the Riverside Hotel.

Harrah's summer lineup includes Harry James, Bill Eckstine, Woody Herman, Dukes of Dixieland, Jerry Colonna, Kim Sisters, Gaylords, DeCastro Sisters, Louis Prima, et al. It's an impressive slate for a lounge that seats less than 100 persons and operates on a 24-hour basis.

The Fun Room at Harolds Club will marquee the Kirby Stone Four, James Darren, Saverio Saridis and Rusty Draper. At this writing, only firm dates for summer showing at the Mapes are Kay Stevens and Lucky Starr. The Holiday Hotel schedules, firmed only through June, shows such top acts as the Harmonica Rascals and Shep Fields.

Henry Miller's 'Harry' For Spoleto, Ditto 'Finnegan'; Gospel Singers Booked

Spoleto, Italy will have its Festival of Two Worlds again, for the sixth summer, June 20 through July 14. Gian-Carlo Menotti is director and Tom Schippers chief conductor. Music, drama, ballet events and an art exhibit are encompassed.

Henry Miller, longtime Paris expatriate writer from Brooklyn, will have his first play, "Just Wild About Harry" mounted for three performances. Herbert Machiz is directing it.

Jean Erdman has translated James Joyce's "Finnegan's Wake" into text, dance and music idiom. Another presentation will be the Italian "The Coach With The Six Insides." Latter moves after Spoleto to the Paris Festival on July 5.

Gospel singers will again participate in the Italian mountain village fest via Ernestine Washington, Lorraine Ellison and their respective groups.

Ballet Rambert from London, Antonio Gades troupe from Madrid represent the dance.

Music events have been previously reported.

Hail Horton Foote For Winning Script Oscar

Wharton, Tex., May 28.

This city will honor its hometown boy, Horton Foote, the screenwriter who won an Oscar for his screenplay of "To Kill A Mockingbird," (U) this Thursday (30). Mayor Fred A. Mills proclaimed "Horton Foote Day." Foote's parents are still local residents.

"To Kill A Mockingbird" opens Thursday at the Rio Theatre here. Foote will be unable to attend the local showing as was originally planned. He is working on the screenplay of "Habitation of Dragons" and the play "Traveling Lady."

Kramer Taking Cinema Student to Festival; Moscow Grants Okay

Washington, May 28.

Soviet Union has consented to allow Stanley Kramer to take one of his U. of California-L.A. cinema students with him to the Moscow Film Festival, July 7-21. Kramer will be the American member of the fest jury.

George Stevens Jr., USIA Motion Pictures chief, was advised of action by the USSR embassy.

"The Soviets," Stevens commented, "have a cinema school in Moscow with 800 full time students. They are doing more in this field than we are in this country."

Not Yet Selected

Hollywood, May 28.

Name of the student who will accompany Stanley Kramer to Moscow has not as yet been determined, his office stated.

Dubbing on his "Mad World" pic has been preoccupying producer-director but he expects to make a selection within next few days.

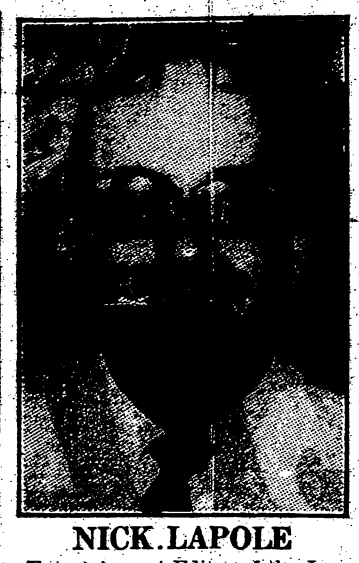
KNOTT BUILDS BIGGEST HOTEL IN BRUSSELS

Brussels, May 28.

This capital city of Belgium has a new hotel, the Westbury, erected in the centre of the city by the Knott Hotel Corp. of America. One of the tallest in Europe it dwarfs all others here. There is no 13th floor, a gesture to ancient superstition. Otherwise nothing is more modern than the Westbury.

Total of 252 rooms are housed in the 23-story structure. All in key with modernity including radio in every room and television on request (meaning extra cost but nonetheless available). And air-conditioning all around the place, which is an innovation for Europe.

Two barrooms and a clubroom are included.



NICK LAPOLE

Entertainment Editor of the Journal American, says:

White House Scribes Toss Variety Show at Annual Gig—JFK Joins in Gags

Washington, May 28.

To entertain President Kennedy at their annual bash, members of the White House Correspondents' Assn. staged a variety bill, and Guy Marks drew the night's biggest ovation.

Also featured were Edie Adams, Barbra Streisand, Ferrante & Teicher and the cast of Chicago's "Struts and Frets," with Merv Griffin as emcee.

The show was on the long side (running over an hour), and in such a big room (the vast Sheraton Hall of the Sheraton-Park Hotel), all the performers except Marks had difficulty keeping the audience quiet.

Marks did lots of impersonations, including an original and well executed voyage through the history of show biz. There was William S. Hart in action in a flickering spotlight, a spoof of one of the Metropolitan Opera radio broadcasts, an amusing razzing of television's "The Untouchables" and "Wagon Train," and a funny Western motion picture starring Robert

High School for Talent Set for Lincoln Center

High School of Performing Arts, for many years a neighbor on W. 46 Street in Manhattan of VARIETY, seems to have won its long fight for status. It is to have a new building built adjacent to Lincoln Center and the Julliard School. This is a real upgrading apparently as the Board of Education was slow to enthuse about the idea of separating "talent" from other students. A complication to the move was and is the need to find a new site for High School of Commerce which now has the location which Performing Arts, publicly supported, will share with expansion of Julliard, which exists by tuition and donation.

High School of Performing Arts alumni has conducted a campaign to establish its image as brood-nest of many a since-famous performer.

Virtue Not Glamorous?

Albany, May 28.

Commenting that "The fact the lives of many stars in Hollywood are dedicated to God and their families seems to have made little impact on changing the public image of stars," writes Leon Paul in his column, "Mosaic," syndicated in Catholic papers. He wrote specifically of "Jews in Hollywood."

He did do after making the further point that "Good people seldom make news or newspaper headlines—this applies to Hollywood stars as well as to the rest of humanity. Father Keller's Christopher programs and Father Peyton have shown use the many fine qualities in the lives of numerous actors and actresses of all religions."

Nazis Still a Dirty Word, Ach!

Frankfurt, May 28.

German sensitivity about the Nazi era, and its portrayal in films, continues. 20th-Fox reports it is having difficulty in lining up top German character actors for key roles in its projected film version of Trevor-Roper's "The Last 24 Hours," dealing with the fall of Berlin and the death of Hitler.

Plans are to make the film on location here in both German and English language versions.

Meanwhile, the German Film Censorship Board has finally approved an uncut version of 20th-Fox's "The Condemned of Altona," which created a storm of controversy when director Vittorio DeSica was shooting here last year. While the board has passed an uncut version of the pic, it's understood that the text, which originally included such lines as "Every time I see a Mercedes I think of Auschwitz," has been "considerably softened."

Chicago Station Tests 'Mature' Music Via Two Cow 'Milkdown'

Chicago, May 28.

Radio station WAIT is risking jibes as to having a high rating in in the cow barns with a downtown display window test of whether a cow that listens to WAIT will give more (or less) milk than one that listens to a cross-section of the five top stations.

Station has installed two Holsteins in a Madison St. window of Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co. department store, has equipped them with earphones and will tune one into WAIT for two weeks while the other listens to the competitive cross-section.

At the end of the fortnight, their comparative milk output will be weighed as a measure of contentment induced by WAIT's "environmental music" programming concept.

The new format, incepted by the station Feb. 1 of this year, emphasizes continuous "mature" music, fewer and more clustered commercials, headline-style newscasts and short features of local inter-

Danes Aid to Jews As Coproduction Subject

Trop Films, of New York, headed by film-tv producer Jack Dunn Trop, and Novaris Film, of Copenhagen, have finalized plans to coproduce a feature film based on the salvation of Danish Jews from the Nazis during World War II.

Film, to be titled "The Defiant Danes," will be directed by Peer Gulbrandsen, head of Novaris, in both Danish and English language versions. An October starting date is planned, aiming for a spring, 1964 release. Most of the cast will be Scandinavian, but several American personalities may be used.

Admits 'Not Obscene' But Bans 'Naughty N. Orleans' Film on Its Adjective

Memphis, May 28.

Memphis' Censor chief exited her post in a "blaze of glory," as she put the proverbial kibosh on "Naughty New Orleans," for showing her. Mrs. Minnie Hooker turned over her resignation to Memphis Mayor Loeb after banning the pic.

The outgoing Censor chiefess said: "We banned the picture because we felt it shouldn't be shown here but we do not consider it obscene," she added. Bill South, who reps the Don Kaye enterprises told VARIETY "we will respect the wishes of the Memphis censor board." There will be no haven for "New Orleans," in West Memphis as the Sunset Ozoner in that sector has now "nixed" all Memphis banned pics.

Mayor Loeb named real estater Frank Hudson to replace Mrs. Hooker with the other six members intact for the balance of the year, the city chief told VARIETY.

'Play It Cool' Latest Twist Picture to Be Banned in Singapore

Singapore, May 28.

Rank's "Play It Cool," banned here because of what the local censors termed "undesirable dance and song sequences," has opened its Malaysian season at the Cathay in Johore Bahru, 16 miles from here

Appeal by Rank execs from the Film Censor Board was fruitless.

The Singapore government, dedicated to eradicating so-called "yellow culture," has lately banned several "twist" films including "Twist Around The Clock," which won Singapore audiences at packed houses in Johore Bahru.

When "West Side Story" (UA) opened at Kuala Lumpur, the Malayan capital, last month all Singapore became worried, thinking the pic was banned here. Tony Chiok, UA's manager here, said "West Side" will show here later.

DIXIE'S HESITATION WALTZ

Kennedy's 'Desegregate!' Plea

Washington, May 28.

Attorney-General Robert F. Kennedy Monday (27) asked owners of Dixie film houses to join other southern business men in voluntarily removing causes for which Negroes can demonstrate. The theory is, according to his associates, to strip the Swanee shores of segregated business establishments before which Negroes can picket. Kennedy fears the demonstrating, which started with moderates, may quickly be taken over by more extreme racial leaders, kindling the danger of an allout race riot, with its physical horror and international political dynamite.

Kennedy, according to associates, sees the Negro-only balconies on no-Negro one-floor theatres on the hominy grits circuits as possibly triggering violence

He called in execs of 40 theatre chains and organizations to urge they give Jim Crow the heaveho voluntarily, asked them to report back on what they do and requested that they not talk to the press. Kennedy said the Justice Dept. would issue whatever statement was to be made.

A Dept. spokesman then told reporters Kennedy and his Asst. Atty. Gen. for Civil Rights, Burke Marshall, had had with the theatre men "an extremely useful exchange of views." Kennedy asked them to solve the problem "at the local level" and told them "it was important to anticipate (racial) moves before the Negroes felt it was necessary to demonstrate," the spokesman said.

Kennedy's press agent said the theatre men did not ask for Government help in desegregating.

Kennedy met last week with hotel men, Yankee and Rebel, and has previously talked with clothing and department store companies operating in Dixie.

British Midlands Anti-Hero Heroes; Boulting Sees Iconoclasm in Rut; Sneak Preview Trouble; Too Late

By VINCENT CANBY

The new British cinema, as repped by such features as "Room at The Top," "Saturday Night and Sunday Morning," has, in its iconoclastic zeal, gone on to create its own cliches: the "anti-hero" hero, the dreary midlands factory town location, etc.

So says Roy Boulting who, with his brother John, has earned the greater part of his U.S. rep via such iconoclestic satires of British life as "I'm All Right, Jack," "Brothers in Law" and the new "Heaveans Above." While he agrees with the intentions of the new British cinema, Boulting believes that it is now suffering from a certain artificiality.

In his opinion, the new film, "This Sporting Life," is "the ultimate statement" of the angry young (film) men, and, as such, just as false as the slick, romantic films which caused the young men to become angry in the first place.

The international success of such specifically British comedies as the Boultings have been turning out does not particularly surprise Roy. Only by being specifically British could the films have been honest and, through that honesty, communicated to audiences abroad. One of the most comic developments in the postwar film scene, he finds, is the international coproduction which, by very definition, must be of "neuter" gender—with very little of importance to say to anybody.

Says Roy of himself and his brother, "We've never considered the 'requirements' of the interna-

'Ben-Hur' Chariots Race Anew and May Overtake 'Gone With the Wind' Biz

Looks like "Gone With the Wind" will lose the crown, at least temporarily, as alltime champion film grosser this summer. Looming as new title-holder is "Ben-Hur." Metro is in the enviable position of being owner of both.

"Wind" is tops now, with an estimated $67,200,000 in worldwide rentals. "Hur" is second at an estimated $67,000,000. (Do not confuse with domestic totals given in VARIETY anni edition).

"Hur" is to be reissued shortly and is a cinch to take in more than $200,000, thus moving ahead of "Wind." In future seasons, however, Metro will be to market again with "Wind" and consequently "Hur" leadership could be only temporary.

The "Cleopatra" partisans think this picture eventually will emerge as No. One.

Bronston-Paramount Talk 'Empire' Handle

Paramount and Samuel Bronston have in the discussion stage a deal whereby Par would take over distribution of Bronston's "Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire" after Bronston Productions itself releases the picture to the key-city dates.

Bronston a short time ago revealed establishment of his own distribution enterprise, with "Roman Empire" as the first to go thls route. There was no indication at the time, however, that Par would take over following the major outletting.

Par and Bronston meanwhile have a coproduction arrangement for "Circus" and others.

Knoxville Query To Wilby-Kincy On Integration

Knoxville, Tenn., May 28.

Civic officials of Knoxville have visited headquarters of Wilby-Kincy Theatres in Atlanta, Ga., recently to discuss the integration problem. Their theatres have recently been the scene of "sit-downs" and "lay-downs" on the main street. Theatres involved were the Tennessee and Bijou.

Wilby-Kincey management contended that they would integrate after an orderly process was put in effect. This means at the same time hotels, restaurants and other places of business are given the same treatment.

A city official said the newly formed committee on integration will handle this problem with ease. Wilby-Kincey and other theatres have insisted that they do not plan to be the main target.

'CLEO' IN GERMANY: HIGH TICKETS, TERMS

Frankfurt, May 28.

Tickets for the 20th-Fox film "Cleopatra" will sell at an all-time high of from $1.25 to $2.50 in West Germany.

Production will open in October in Berlin, with following dates in Hamburg, Duesseldorf, Cologne, Frankfurt, Stuttgart and Munich.

Terms will run from 70% to 50%.

YOU LEAD, WE MIGHT FOLLOW

United States Attorney-General Robert Kennedy, brother of the President, turned his attention Monday (27) in Washington to the matter of desegregating film theatres in Dixie cities. A representative number of spokesmen for the theatre circuits of the South, including Interstate of Texas and Wilby-Kincy of Georgia, joined various New York exhibitor and Theatre Owners of America voices. All sides preferred to play down identification of individuals. Absolutely nobody would afterwards talk to reporters.

Many of the circuits operating in Southern cities are, of course, owned and controlled from New York, which fact occasioned some Manhattan picketing of an embarrassing nature about a year ago. For some time picket lines before theatres have been a familiar phenomenon in lots of Carolina, Georgia, Texas, Tennessee and other towns. The Kennedy administration is avowedly frightened that with summer recess from the schools the nation may be disgraced by race riots, a political liability in the United Nations and in the ideological war with Soviet Russia.

If nothing official beyond an innocuous Dept. of Justice handout followed Monday's meeting it can be stated that the polite-but-silent reps of the Dixie chains, and their northern superiors, took the same position with Kennedy that has been typical in earlier regional discussions: "We don't want to assume the leadership in desegregation when the problem more broadly concerns transportation, hotels, department stores and eating places."

No Experience?

It appears that none of the film theatre showmen with realistic experience in desegregation were invited to Kennedy's meeting. By coincidence — apparently unmentioned—another Southern city, Norfolk, was theatrically desegregated only last week. Previously VARIETY has carried feature banner stories on the changeover in Nashville (May 1961), in Miami and Atlanta (May 1962), and in Memphis (Sept. 1962). Richmond is another city that may soon give up the old policies and Houston is a possibility, perhaps remote, as the first big city in Texas, although El Paso is reported liberalized.

A curious angle is that where big city film theatres are thrown open in the South nothing happens. The Negroes covet rather than exercise the privilege of paying white admission prices to enter white film houses. With desegregation Negroes lose their cheaper prices.

Most of the troubles incident to pickets have related to mass arrests, in which white college students are often prominently included. "Trepassing" is the common police charge. Past issues of this publication have been rife with such reported incidents. Lately there have been examples of large groups sitting down on the sidewalks, blocking theatre entrances. The typical tactic is for the Negro queue to keep rotating, pass on from the window after refusal, then return.

It is not the general opinion of New York film showmen that theatres are the worst focus of racial antagonism in the South. Eating places may be. Bus terminals perhaps second. Department stores are under much pressure, too.

Deep-Dyed

All this is of the essence of current American politics and the next president election. That the Attorney-General is doing all he can to counteract the fear of and to prevent summertime riots is evident. The terrible Chicago riots after World War I and the Detroit riots after World War II were both products of hot spells with milling mobs on the streets.

As To Baldwin

New York theatrical circles over the weekend began to hear mixed comments about the meeting Robert Kennedy had in Lena Horne's apartment with a group of

Mosfilm's Vladimir Surin Studies U.S. Techniques on Eve of 'Meridian'; Russia's Yen for 'West Side Story'

Lester Cowan's "Meeting at A Far Meridian," Russian-U.S. coproduction now scheduled to start shooting in Russia this summer, hopefully will not only be the first of a number of coproductions, but may also provide the opportunity for an expanding exchange of top film talent between the two countries.

This is the opinion of Vladimir Surin, chief of Mosfilm, Moscow's largest film studio, and Cowan's partner in the upcoming film. Surin, who arrived in this country last week, departed from New York yesterday (Tues.) for Hollywood where he'll meet studio execs and, most specifically, check with U.S. technicians on various American 70m processes. Plan is to shoot "Meeting" in the Russ 70m process which was unveiled for the first time in the west at the 1961 Cannes film fest in the spec, "History of The years of Fire."

With Cowan as his host, Surin spent last week meeting such U.S. industry toppers as Robert Benjamin and Arthur Krim of United Artists, Leonard Goldenson of American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, and Si Fabian of Stanley Warner. On Monday (29), Surin was in Washington where he lunched with Sen. J. William Fulbright (D., Ark.) and met Presidential press chief Pierre Salinger and the U.S. Information Agency's Edward R. Morrow.

Here To Study

The purpose of his trip, said Surin, was not only to study how the U.S. film industry functions, but also to reassure his "Meridian" partners that nothing short of war would prevent Mosfilm from carrying through its part of the coproduction bargain. First draft of the screenplay has been approved by both partners and plan is to start shooting in the Caucasus in August, returning to Moscow in the winter, with U.S. locations to be done in late winter and spring. If all goes according to the present sked, film will be ready for release late next year.

Reade-Sterling' Cowan's partner in the deal, will have domestic U. S. distribution of the film. It's expected a deal will be made with a major company for worldwide re-

Buys Episodic Pix: Swindles, Inside Paris

Cannes, May 28.

Though a plethora of French and Italian sketch, episode or features have played the U.S., with from good to not good results, the biggest Yank foreign film distrib buy at the recent Cannes Fest was an episoder. Namely, Walter Reade Jr., head of Continental Dist. Inc., laying out a $75,000 guarantee for "The Greatest Swindles in the World" produced by Pierre Roustang.

Roustang was responsible for a critics' success "Love at 20." Pic has such directors as the Polish Roman Polanski, the French Jean-Luc Godard, Claude Charol, the Italo Ugo Gregoretti and others. Its title sums it up.

Reade also took an option on another upcoming Roustang segment release tentatively titled "Secret Paris." This will delve into the non-tourist aspects of Paris.

A Few Mop As Screen Authors, Most Just Hope

Hollywood, May 28.

A five-year analysis of income of members of Writers Guild of America West has just been completed, first such survey ever made by this guild. Purpose of the breakdown is twofold: To serve as a guide in future negotiations, and to ascertain in detail the economic condition of WGAW and its members.

Survey covers the five-year span from Jan. 1, 1958, to June 30, 1962. Latter six months of last year are not included in the analysis because records of earnings weren't complete for that period, at the time the survey was completed.

There has been a consistent rise both in membership in the guild, and in the number of writers earning no income during the period involved. Those earning no coin the first six months of last year numbered 815 out of a total membership of 2,064. (WGAW membership since has increased to 2,200).

No-income writers totaled 581 in 1961; 535, 1960; 486, in 1959, and 489, in 1958.

While 1962 isn't accurately reflected in the survey inasmuch as it only covers the first six months of that year, the recent WGAW financial report disclosed that was a record year in earnings.

Latest complete year in the survey—1961—was a good one for many guild members. Total of 284 guild writers earned from $20-30,000, highest in the five-year survey in that income category. And 178 earned $30-50,000, also highest for the period involved. The writers earning from $50-100,000 numbered 90, to equal the previous high in that category registered in 1960. Sixteen writers earned over $100,000, highest in that bracket in the period of the survey.

Survey is also broken down into earnings of screenwriters and of telescripters. Screenwriters had their best year in the five-year span (excepting 1962, with incomplete figures) in 1961, 78 earning $10-20,000; 54, $20-30,000; 60, $30-50,000; 13, over $100,000.

There were 101 vidscripters earning $30-50,000 in 1961, and 32 in the $50-100,000 category, both highs in the survey period. Only one telescripter earned over $100,000 in that period, and that was in 1960.

Allied Artists Passes Dividend; Hopeful For Profitable New Films

Operations of Allied Artists Pictures Corp. and its wholly-owned subsids for the 39 weeks ended March 30, 1963, as shown by the books without audit, resulted in a net loss of $1,200,000. This compared with a net loss for the corresponding period last year of $1,241,000. Gross income for the 39 weeks came to $13,584.000, up over the $9,585,000 grossed by the company for the same period in 1962.

At a meeting of the company's exec committee last week, the group decided to pass the quarterly divvy on the 5½% preferred stock. AA prez Steve Broidy said that the decision to forego the payment was made because of losses sustained during the current fiscal year. He continued, however, that on the basis of upcoming product, the company should show a substantial profit for the first six months of the coming fiscal year, starting July 1, 1963.

Included in the releases for the period is Samuel Bronston's "55 Days at Peking." The company has also been doing nicely with two exploitation pix curently making the rounds, "Black Zoo" and "Day of the Triffids." A hefty production sked has been undertaken, with some 19 pix due for release during the coming months. a larger circulation than the distrib has had going in some time.

Preparing 'The Leopard' English Print

Unusual Task of Sydney Pollack, Working on Titanus Film in Manhattan

"The best you can hope for—if you do a good job—is that nobody notices it."

Thus comments Sydney Pollack, whose usual metier is that of a television director but who, for the last six weeks, has been quietly at work in Manhattan "directing" the English language version of the multi-million dollar Titanus-20th-Fox production, "The Leopard." The Italo film, directed by Luchino Visconti and starring Burt Lancaster, took the Golden Palm as best picture at the just-concluded Cannes fest.

It really is not as if he were making a "new" version of the film, Pollack says, since, technically, there never was an "original" version. This is in reference to the fact that "The Leopard" was shot multi - lingually, with Lancaster speaking his lines in English, Alain Delon and Claudia Cardinale their lines in French, and the rest of the cast speaking Italian. Thus, the leading roles of the "Italian" version shown at Cannes were actually dubbed by actors other than the stars.

An old friend of Lancaster's, Pollack, who has never worked on a dubbing job before, was brought in by the star to act as "artistic director" — the point being that because of the quality of the film (to say nothing of its cost), this had to be a superior dubbing job, so superior that no one will realize it has been dubbed. To back up Lancaster, who is doing his own voice, Pollack has assembled a top flight cast of character actors who do not usually go in for the faceless voice performing—Thomas Gomez, Kurt Kaznar, Howard DeSilva and Donald Madden.

Costing 150 Gs

Cost of making this version is estimated at approximately $150,000, which includes the physical recording work being done at New York's Titra Sound Studios, plus the expenses of a trip by Pollack to Italy before he started work, to confer with Visconti and watch him putting together the Italo version, plus a return trip to Italy where he will again confer with Visconti on the mixing of the new tracks.

The English language version of the film is expected to run two hours and 40 minutes, meaning (Continued on page 16)

Union is starting operations with a pledged $11,500.

Allied Artists Selling Studio

Hollywood, May 28.

Allied Artists is involved in negotiations with two different groups regarding the sale of its studio, AA prexy Steve Broidy has disclosed.

Broidy declined to identify the groups since negotiations are now on, but said one of the groups would possibly acquire the studio for production purposes, and the other was interested in the property for conversion to commercial uses.

Reluctant to pin down a date when a deal might be finalized, Broidy commented "something could happen in two or three weeks."

GASTON HAKIM SAYS: 'WILL FIGHT CUSTOMS'

Importer Gaston Hakim reported yesterday (Tues.) he plans to fight U. S. Customs' detention of his French pic, "La Poupee" (The Doll).

Although Customs officials deny that any final decision has been made about the film, Hakim says he received word from them last week that the film was being detained as "a prohibited import under Section 305 of the Tariff Act law."

That has to do with obscenity, nudity and material advocating the overthrow of the government. Film is described by the importer as a "fantasy-comedy," with perhaps just a small bit of nudity.

Fitzgibbons Into Chair, Bolstad Chiefs Famous; New Veep Hierarchy

Toronto, May 28.

In an apparently sudden weekend development, J. J. Fitzgibbons, longtime president of Famous Players Canadian Corp. was moved into the newly-created post of chairman of the board. Reuben Bolstad was made president and managing director.

In an unprecedented move, five veepees whack up duties of Fitzgibbons. These are Eugene Fitzgibbons, communication management; K. Y. Easton, communications operations; Robert Eves, theatre operations. Western difision; William Summerville, theatre operations, Eastern division. Claire Dodge was named treasurer; Angus McCunn, secretary.

J. J. Fitzgibbons held presidency since 1941 and has been 33 years with Famous; Bolstad has been veepee and treasurer since 1941 since, when he joind the company as comptroller in 1931. Largest chain of Canadian theatres, Famous Players operate 314 houses across Canada.

20th-Fox Projects O'seas Pic Deals

Frankfurt, May 28.

Twentieth - Century - Fox is expanding overseas with new production companies in Europe, one will open here next year. There's already a French production company. Similar move in Italy is contemplated.

With the return to Hollywood for many of the productions, it is also planned that the European companies will provide interesting backgrounds, and that the films turned out overseas will be of interest for an international audience.

In addition, it is also possible that co-productions made in Germany through a German company would be eligible for some of the money that the Germans hope to raise through the Martin plan. This would levy a special fee on German film theatres, with the funds raised going into a special budget to finance German productions.

Columbia also recently formed a German production company, and a recent German-American co-production titled "The Fire Ship" was thus eligible for a special $50,000 German award for being a cultural asset to the country.

SUSSKIND WANTS IN FOR SCREEN CREDIT

David Susskind is dickering with the producers to participate in the filmization of the Broadway comedy "Purlie Victorious." He'd like to invest in the pic, major shooting for which was completed several weeks ago, in return for screen credit as an associate producer or some similiar billing.

The tv-film packager has been sitting in on some of the editing sessions on the adaptation by Ossie Davis and director Nick Webster of Davis' comedy about southern race relations. The film's producers, Milton and Tom Hammer, don't need the extra cash, however, and so they're not pressed to bring him in. As it stands now, there's a good chance that Susskind may join the production all the same.

Meanwhile, some exterior shooting is being done this week upstate New York, all previous work having been done at Fox Movietone Studios, N.Y. No distribution arrangements have yet been made for the film, the Hammers wanting to wait until a finishd product is available for screening before they seek one out. They are also toying with the idea of possibly handling some of the distribution themselves. This due to the specialized nature of the racially-integrated pic and its subject matter. Susskind's participation would have some effect in this area, should negotiations put him in the picture.

HIS LIFE WITH 'CLEO'

Satevepost Plugalong For Walter Wanger Memoir

The Saturday Evening Post is going all out in its promotion of the Walter Wanger memoire, "My Life With Cleopatra." Post is printing 125,000 extra copies for newstand sales, and is backing this with a national radio-tv campaign featuring Wanger's voice and person in the respective spots.

The Post story, a 16-page spread plus cover treatment, consists of excerpts from the book, written with Joe Hyams, which Bantam officially publishes June 5. Post story appears in the June 1 issue out this week.

Keeping Panacolor's Secret

Sequences of films shot in Panacolor's new color process were shown in New York yesterday at the company's annual meeting of stockholders at the Trans-Lux 52d Street Theatre.

Process, which utilizes black and white positive raw stock instead of multi-layer color stock, is said to make possible savings of up to $20,000 a picture. Shown to stockholders were scenes from Warner Bros.' upcoming "Castillians" and the Princess Grace Tour of Monaco, a tver.

Attempts to secure trade-intelligible explanation of what was "new" about process was met with statement this was a secret.

Leo Jaffe Luncheon for UJA Funds

Over 400 persons were at the Americana Hotel, N.Y., last Thursday (23) for the United Jewish Appeal, Motion Picture and Amusement Division, luncheon which combined testimonial for Leo Jaffe, exec v.p. of Columbia, and a fund-raising peg for UJA. With Laurence A. Tisch (Loew's-Tisch Hotels) serving as chairman, the outing proved successful on both counts.

There was an abundance of serious business in the conversation from the dais, mainly from John Stanley Graufel, plus articulate innkeeper and theatre operator Tisch, ditto Barney Balaban and Jaffe himself, about the need for funds to combat modern-day offenses against the Jewish people. And from the dais, too, came a friendly word about Jaffe.

Tenor of comments and, particularly, heavy turnout made it clear that Jaffe is held in higher esteem than ever by fellow-industryites. Many feel he's in line to become president of Col, barring unforseen circumstances, when Abe Schneider (now incidentally visiting in Europe) decides to bow out. Schneider wants it this way, but of course there's nothing imminent about this.

The day's salute for Jaffe was for the present-day guy himself, both as industry exec and a champion of the UJA cause. Gene.

Tough Mugg-Creator Mickey Spillane's Views on Action, Audiences, Front $

By EDDIE KALISH

With nine successful books behind him, Mickey Spillane is now turning to films. His latesy story, "The Girl Hunters" becomes a soon-to-be-released pic and he has three more stories with feature plans being readied, one an original screenplay.

For "Girl Hunters" Spillane is adapter, star and cosponsor of Fellane Productions which lensed the pic, with Bob Fellows as producer and Roy Rowland directing. All three of these participants deferred their salaries 100%, putting all of the money into the negative, which Spillane feels is the only way to make an indie film successfully.

Upcoming are "The Snake," a sequal to "Girl Hunters" which begins four hours after the first one ends. It is due to be published in June and go before the cameras in September, with the Fellane setup producing. Upon completion of this film, "The Green Woman" will go into production. This is Spillane's first original screenplay. Next will be "The Straggler," a World War II yarn to be issued first as a book with the writer later doing the screen adaptation which he'll also do for "Snake." Colorama Features, which is distributing "Girl Hunters," has first refusal rights on the others.

Spillane books have been made into pix in the past, all of which he says he hated. There's also a tv series pegged to his Mike Hammer character. As an actor Spillane has appeared in only one other pic, "Ring of Fear," in which he played himself. He portrays the Hammer character in "Girl Hunters."

Spillane has strong feelings about picture financing, particularly in the area of front money for participants. He believes that all available money should go towards the negative. "Nobody is worth half the money that should go into a production," he says. "If they're that good, then let 'em take the money out of the profits. Let the

UNION QUEUE FOR EASTERN NEGOTIATIONS

In what appears a never-ending round of contract negotiations, the Film Producers Assn. of Manhattan is currently dickering with International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees wardrobe local 764 and will be dickering with IA cameramen local 644 in mid-June. The FPA, which reps about 75% of the Gotham film producers, mostly commercial, recently concluded prolonged talks with the Screen Directors International Guild.

Wardrobe talks are over an old pact which expired about a year ago without a new one ever being set. Negotiations are progressing satisfactorily, it's reported. FPA's pact with the cameramen expires June 30 and the union has already sent in its demands. These include across the board increases, according to an FPA source. Details, however, were not revealed.

Trade Curiosity On Timed News Re Rosenfield

Formal disclosure last Wednesday (22) of the appointment of Jonas Rosenfield Jr. as vicepresident and director of ad-pub-exploitation of 20th-Fox struck the industry with some surprise, if only because the rumors of a possible 20th affiliation had been so vigorously and unequivocally denied in the weeks immediately following Rosenfield's resignation of his Columbia veepcy.

There was also trade speculation on why the 20th appointment was not made public until the day following the 20th annual meeting of shareholders. There seemed to be a certain irony in this. At the annual meeting, prexy Darryl F. Zanuck, in giving a rundown on how he had cut total executive compensation, had equated the $3,500 weekly stipend paid to former ad-pub veep Charles Einfeld with the $650 weekly check now given global publicity director Harold Rand—the implication being that Rand was doing the job once done by Einfeld. Zanuck did not mention the fact that since Einfeld's departure, 20th has taken on William H. Schneider as creative advertising consultant, nor did he reveal that he was on the point of naming a new ad-pub veep.

Appointment of Rosenfield will relieve exec veep Seymour Poe of the burden of overseeing day-to-day operations of Poe's originally envisioned "troika" of ad, pub and exploitation directors. (Students of industry titles, who noted that Rosenfield was named "vicepresident and director of ad-pub-exploitation," read into that phraseology the possibility that the new veep's activities thus may not be restricted only to the ad-pub department. Einfeld's title had been veep "in charge of" ad-pub-exploitation.)

Rosenfield thus returns to 20th, where he worked from 1945 until 1952 in various capacities in the ad department, including ad manager.

INDIE MAKERS IN STRONG SPOT

Hollywood, May 28.

"It is a seller's market for the independent producer," contends producer-director Robert Aldrich. "If one studio doesn't want your package you can take it across the street and make a deal," he asserts.

Greater opportunity exists today than ever before to "play one studio against the other" in setting indie deals, maintains Aldrich. He cites the "unbelievable terms" reportedly garnered by 7-Arts and Kirk Douglas' Joel Productions for "Seven Days in May" at Paramount as prime example of what can be accomplished by ruthless, inter-studio bargaining.

Slight "catch" in the currently "fortuitous conditions" is need to venture "risk capital" to develop property and corral a cast, according to Aldrich. It is, of course, this investment which has beefed up the indie's position, he adds.

Aldrich this week launched "Four for Texas" for Warner's release with two weeks Mojave locationing. Pic is a combined effort of his Associates and Aldrich, Frank Einatra's Essex Prods. and Dean Martin's Claude Prods, which have been fused into "SAM Co." for pic.

Sinatra and Martin are in on gross participation deals, realizing coin from first dollar taken in at b.o., notes Aldrich, adding that his is a profit deal which, he quips, is "very fortunate for Warners. If I was in on gross, too, who would mind the store? In other words, if everyone is on gross, who's to care about keeping costs down to implement profits?"

Voicing no consternation about gross cuts being given "a Martin, a Sinatra or a Liz Taylor" Aldrich believes such deals are a "pain in the neck" and "bad business" only when given those whose popularity with ticket-buyers does not match their boodle.

"Texas" is budgeted at $5,000,000, according to Aldrich, with $1,300,000 taken off the top for straight star salaries. In addition to healthy cash advances to both Sinatra and Martin, figure includes salaries of costars Bette Davis, Anita Ekberg and Ursula Andress.

Though he has an eye out for possible "Baby Jane"-type properties which could be brought in at a similar price tag ($800,000), Aldrich cautions against even thinking in terms of similar grosses. He asks, "How many films made at any price have taken in as much?" Additionally, he believes it is dangerous to get typed as a maker of any one kind of film.

"Despite Lew Wasserman's genius, Universal will eventually run out of comedies for Doris Day," he maintains.

Despite the fact that "Texas" is only now going before the cameras it has already been set for a Dec. 12 opening in N. Y. Film is skedded to wind sometime in August after which Aldrich has plotted a "crash cutting" program similar to one he employed on "Baby Jane."

Producer-director avers a belief in "telescoping" the time between a film's end and its opening so that the effect of publicity engendered during production has not been dissipated. Advertising campaign on pic, in fact, will launch with Fourth of July tie-ins, notes Aldrich.

AUSTRIA IS 'BESONDER' OVER U'S 'MOCKINGBIRD'

Following the lead of Germany and Holland, which already have designated Universal's "To Kill A Mockingbird" to be worthy of special tax consideration, Austria has given the film its "Besonders Wertvoll" (most valuable) certificate.

Designation means that the film will be entitled to reductions in entertainment tax of up to 75% in many cities and towns throughout the country when it goes into release.

Truth Tortured Into Pretzel Design By TV Stations Selling 'Firstruns'; TOA Plea to Federal Trade Comm.

John H. Stembler, Theatre Owners of America prez, has registered a protest with the Federal Trade Commission over what the exhib organization considers to be unfair, untrue and misleading advertising of vault films shown on tv. Protest, made with the support of Allied States Assn., notes the impact of features on the home tube as a major competitor of theatres and complains of the captioning practices of webs when advertising and listing these showings.

In a meeting with FTC chairman Rand Dixon, followed by a documented letter, Stembler cited such examples of web ads as "First Run Movies Are Better On (channel) 7," "Every Night a First Run Movie," "Saturday Night at the Movies" and others' claiming that such labeling implies that the public will be seeing pix on tv for the first time anywhere. He noted that, to his knowledge, all feature pix have been theatrically shown before being displayed via tv.

Stembler pointed out that certain pictures on tv state that they are being shown in CinemaScope of other processes when, in fact, such processes are only available in theatres. He noted also that viewers are not informed that films they are watching are cut versions of the originals.

He called on the FTC to do what it can to have those responsible for such practices cease them, urging the Commission to use its offices to have such actions promptly and permanently discontinued. In a letter to Stembler, William S. Hill, attorney of the bureau of deceptive practices of the FTC stated "although it would appear that the public in general is aware that the movies shown on television have been previously exhibited in motion picture theatres, it may be that some portion of the public could be deceived by the advertising used. We will therefore look into this matter with the view of making such investigation and taking such action as may be required in the public interest."

Knows His Ingenues

Though last week's annual meeting of 20th-Fox stockholders was the first at which prez Darryl F. Zanuck had ever presided, the exec handled himself with a veteran's savoire faire. This was especially apparent when the two femme stockholders suddenly resorted to blows in a tussle over possession over the floor microphone.

Zanuck surveyed the scene with some surprise for a moment and then, as if slightly bored, called out: "Will the photographers please take their pictures, and then we can get on with the meeting!"

Embassy Product Readying; Seven Go This Summer

Embassy Pictures' summer release sked is perking strongly with seven features slated for market between June and Labor Day. An additional five have been pencilled in for release before the year end.

Opening June 18 at the Festival and New Embassy Theatres will be Federico Fellini's "8½." Pic will inaugurate the Festival, currently being built under the co-ownership of Embassy prez Joseph E. Levine and James J. Mage. Also coming in toward the end of June is "Women of the World," Italo documentary by the maker of the current "Mondo Cane," Gualtiero Jacopetti, preeming at the Forum and another Gotham house and going national three-four weeks after the debut. Also slated for June are the Yank indie "Light Fantastic" and French "Young Girls of Good Families," with houses not signed yet.

In July, Embassy will release "Crime Does Not Pay." This Italo import was issued before but the distrib discovered that it had been sent the wrong print and yanked it. Company has now gotten the print situation straightened out and will try it again. August will see the preem of the German-made "Threepenny Opera" at Cinema I & II, N. Y., and, for the Labor Day weekend, the company will preem the Italo "Queen Bee," which recently attracted attention at Cannes.

Pierre Dominique Gasseau's "Only One New York" feature-documentary about the mores of the various ethnic groups in the city, will make its bow in the fall. Currently lensing in Italy, the Carlo Ponti-Levine coproduction "Ghost at Noon," starrring Brigitte Bardot and Jack Palance, is a probable October entry. Also expected by the end of the year out of the Ponti-Levine association are "Yesterday, Today and Tomorrow," "Empty Canvas" and "Cassanova." The currently-filming "Zulu," a Levine-Paramount coproduction, is expected to be ready for Christmas release by Embassy in the States and Canada and Par abroad.

In addition, Embassy is currently marketing a package of reissues for driveines and subsequent run situations which includes "Atilla," the "Hercules" pix, "Fabiloa" and several others. The company also has several pix currently making the rounds, including "Long Day's Journey Into Night," "Divorce—Italian Style" and others. In all, a hefty program for the rapidly-growing indie.

Directors Re 'Mutilation'

Hollywood, May 28.

Directors Guild of America has protested the "mutilation" of theatrical films shown on tv, prexy George Sidney revealed at the annual membership meeting here Thursday night. N. Y. branch held its meeting the same night. Protest was lodged with Federal Communications and Federal Trade Commissions.

Guild is also exploring means of obtaining pacts with producers of industrial, commercial and educational films as well as obtaining jobs for DGA members on government films, Sidney said. Most industrial activity is in New York, Chicago and Detroit. (See Page One story, May 23 issue, VARIETY.

Directors national membership now totals 2,106, including 1,329 directors, 472 assistant directors and 305 associate directors, stage managers and program assistants, reported acting secretary Delbert Mann. Other reports were given by treasurer Lesley Selander John Rich on insurance program; Willis Goldbeck DGA-producers pension plan; David Butler, educational and benevolent funds

Robert Vreeland chairman of the assistant directors council and Richard Bennett, chairman of the associate director-stage managers council, also spoke.

George Schaefer, first veepee, presided over the N. Y. session, and Sidney at the local session, which was attended by more than 600.

Dwyer Off to Buffalo

Patrick Dwyer has been named 20th-Fox's ad-pub field rep for the Buffalo and Pittsburgh branches, replacing Ralph Buring, promoted to the Atlanta branch.

Dwyer, who'll headquarter in Buffalo, joins 20th after an eight-year hitch with the Loew's circuit in St. Louis, where his duties included ad-pub work.

Reviews From Cannes Festival

I Fidanzati
(The Fiancees)
(ITALIAN)

Cannes, May 21.

Titanus release of Titanus-Sicilia Spa 22 Decembre production. With Carlo Cabrini, Anna Canzi. Written and directed by Ermanno Olmi. Camera, Lamberto Caimi; editor, Carla Colombo. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 84 MINS.

Giovanni ..... Carlo Cabrini
Liliana ..... Anna Canzi

In his second film Ermanno Olmi displays a feeling for style and visual insight that makes him one of the best young directors practicing in Italy today and adds another notch for the Italo film upbeat. It's very subtlety and assurance might make this primarily for arty theatres abroad. It has the deeper themes and newness in style and outlook for arty audiences. But depth distrib looks limited.

A young worker has a chance for advancement in going to work in a factory in southern Italy. A long engagement with a girl is going a bit sour and he leaves her. The perking industrialization in southern Italy is blocked out as well as the man's solitude at first and his acceptance of conditions and a renewal of a feeling with his fiancee through letters.

They finally express themselves and find a way towards final marriage. It seems one-dimensional but director Olmi keeps attention on his almost inarticulate characters by knowing observation, a flawless grasp of scene juxtaposition and a fluid break in time and space to show memories and the present mingling freely.

The personages are always interesting and made absorbing by Olmi's obvious concern for them. The bordedom suffered by the new and displaced workers is not the theme of the film. This treats both the need for individual change in a developing world as well as an altering of conditions. Sharp little incidents to underline the financee's feelings plus the silent flashbacks and daydreams, and the feel of work blend all into a gentle look at a certain aspect of Italian life today.

It has the incisiveness to raise it to make this international in scope. The non-actors fit into the technique and scope of the film. An offbeater but with a newness and clarity in style to underline the changing narrative sense of filmmaking today. It is technically excellent. Mosk.

Le Rat D'Amerique
(American Adventurer)
(FRENCH-COLOR-(TOTALVISION)

Cannes, May 21.

Pathe release of Franco London Film-Madeleine Films-Zebra Films production. Stars Charles Aznavour, Marie Laforet; features Franco Fabrizi. Directed by Jean-Gabriel Albicocco. Screenplay, Jacques Lanzmann, Albicocco from book by Lanzmann; camera (Eastmancolor), Quinto Albicocco; editor, Boris Lewin. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 95 MINS.

Charles ..... Charles Aznavour
Maria ..... Marie Laforet
Paul ..... Franco Fabrizi

Vague story allows for roaming around a good part of South America in this adventure opus. Coincidence is stretched, narrative is curt and characterization is thrown to the four winds. Also, the action is either forced or sporadic and underlined by one of the most intrusive, overripe music scores in years. So this looks mainly a possible playoff item abroad on its locales, color and large screen.

A young Frenchman disembarks in Paraguay to see a rich uncle, and remake his life. But the relatives turn out to be petty, cheap and lacking in any generosity. Scene is false and fabricated to have him on his uppers in the teeming lowlife aspects of the country. He gets involved with a girl and in gun running which leads to a flight across the border when federal troops attack.

He and the girl manage to be saved by an old railroad guard. Then comes a meeting with a shifty Frenchman, prison for the man and concubinage for the girl and murder of her forced lover after the prison release. He hides out in a copper mine where she manages to find him. They finally amass enough money for a trip back to Europe.

Charles Aznavour has a timid presence but not the robustness needed for the role of the wanderer. Marie Laforet displays an expressive face as the girl in his life, who is the only loyal thing in the pic.

There is some excellent imagery but this falls between the stools of an adventure pic, a look at man in elemental episodes and the so-called "cinema truth" aspects of recreated actions with real people. None are adequately assimilated. So this turns out to be an erratic adventure pic with some good imagery, forced progression and okay acting. It looms as a fair bet at home, but with harder going abroad. Mosk.

Jak Byc Kochana
(The Art of Loving)

Cannes, May 21.

Polish State Film release of Kamera production. Stars Barbara Krafftowna, Zbigniew Cybulski; features Artur Miodnicki, Wieneczyslaw Glinski, Wieslaw Golas. Directed by Wojciech J. Has. Screenplay, Kazmierz Brandys from his own novel; camera, Stefan Matyjaskiewicz; editor, Sofia Zworniek. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 100 MINS.

Felicja ..... Barbara Krafftowna
Witek ..... Zbigniew Cybulski
Tomasz ..... Artur Miodnicki
Traveler ..... Wieneczyslaw Glinski
Officer ..... Wieslaw Golas

A tale of memory and its continual presence in life is adroitly fashioned in this film. The flashbacks are supple and direct and the film is clear if somewhat talky. It perhaps has too many subtle allusions to recent history for general foreign audiences. It remains a specialized expert item.

An actress is on a trip to Paris from Warsaw and reflects on the last few years of her life. It goes back to the occupation and her hiding of a fellow actor who has supposedly killed a collaborator. He is weak and a bit cowardly, but suffers most from not having an audience for his vanity, ego and supposed bravery.

After the war, he leaves her but finds that he has been accused of cowardice. He finally commits suicide as she clears herself of a collaboration charge and becomes a popular actress. But on her trip she finds a simple communion with another passenger and a realization of her life through reliving her past.

This also has solid feeling for the recent past as well as telling notations on the Polish flambovant character and thirst for needless heroism. The director gives this a solid mounting to bring out its theme clearly in showing the effects of war on a personal rather than collective level.

Acting carries the brunt of this subtle film with a finely measured, revealing performance of the woman by Barbara Krafftowna and the empty actor by Zbigniew Cybulski. It has a neat, narrative style that is literary but still well sustained via its images. In short, a difficult offbeater. Mosk.

El Otro Cristobal

(CUBAN)

Cannes, May 21.

Empresa-ICAIC-Test Films-Adam Ulrych production and release. With Jean Bouise, Alden Knight, Bertina Acevedo, Pierre Chaussat, Marc Dedicourt. Written and directed by Armand Gatti. Camera, Henri Alekan; music, Gilberto Valdes. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 115 MINS.

Cristobal ..... Jean Bouise
Anastasio ..... Alden Knight
Virgin ..... Bertina Acevedo

A French filmmaker is responsible for Cuba's first bow at a major film fest. Film obviously has had great means at its disposal and is a mixture of surrealism, satire and cosmic comedy. Though having some brilliant spots, this is somewhat too sketchy and confused overall to have many foreign possibilities except for Eastern Bloc countries and possibly some Latino circuits.

Film begins in heaven with the angels singling out a dictator in some mythical Latin American country whose main concern is building a canal with money from its big, rich neighbor. He is killed in an uprising and in purgatory hatches a plot to take over heaven which he does. He changes the name to hell but is finally defeated by a sailor who also has been giving the dictatorial reps trouble on earth.

So its little potshots at the U.S. and its hand in imposing its standards of living on its Latin neighbors are rather familiar and not even biting. It appears to be mainly interested in satisizing Latin strongman governments.

Snatches of the film, such as chases and crowd uprisings, have comic and mixed dramatic flair. The feeling for plastic lensing values, unusual filmic language and inventiveness are sometimes effective. But it is just too top-heavy with too many themes and effects. Eventually this bogs down in its own abandon, intellectualism and symbolism.

A Virgin Mary who joins the revolutionaries on earth, the main character symbolizing a sort of new Christopher Columbus coming back to get embroiled with the lands he discovered, simple human goodness vs. exploitation, and other aspects, make up this unusual but overloaded film that marks Cuba's first international airing. It is not a success. Music is racy and tops. Mosk.

Cannes, May 21.

Vassili Drakaki production and release. With Emilie Pitta, Phedon Georgitsis, Takis Emmanouil, Nikos Tsahirisis. Directed by Takis Kanellopoulos. Screenplay, Georges Kitopoulos, Kanellopoulos; camera, Gregoire Daniks, Giovanni Variana; music, Argyris Moumadis. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 90 MINS.

Sophie ..... Emilie Pitta
Stratos ..... Phedon Georgitsis
Prof. ..... Takis Emmanouil
Yango ..... Nikos Tsahirisis

An insistence on overlong, posed shots, a too slow tempo and self-indulgent direction make this film pretentious rather than dramatically valid and humanly taking. A platoon during the early part of Greece's losing fight against Italy in the last war is the pretext of this sombre pic. However, with all its faults, the film unveils a definite production talent as soon as attention is paid to the subject rather than in trying to achieve an arty pic at any cost.

This remains a film with slight arty chances abroad on its intermittent shafts of poetry too often obscured by too measured, heavy-handed direction. A group of soldiers come dumbly up against a stronger enemy. Their life seems to be mainly waiting, and brief periods of battles. Then it is over, and they go home defeated to undergo occupation.

The director has relied on long held closeups and artily staged group shots to try to get a tragic significance and stylized purity. But this begins to wear. And the lack of character and true dramatic insight soon make this a group of fine shots rather than a progressive tale.

Actors do have a slight human dimension in spite of the directorial static approach with technical credits of a good order. It does show a budding Greek talent that will have to set its sights lower to achieve the best results. Mosk.

Alvorada
(Alvorada)
(GERMAN—COLOR)

Cannes, May 28.

Constantin release of Mannesmann production. Directed and written by Hugo Niebeling. Camera (Eastmansolor), Antonio Estervao, Anders Lembcke, Herbert Mueller; music, Oskar Sala; editor, Gertrud Petermann. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 75 MINS.

This full-length documentary pic was West Germany's official entry at the 1963 Cannes Fest. Directed and written by 32-year-old Hugo Niebeling, "Alvorada" already has stirred international attention for it nearly walked off with the Oscar last April. Losing then to "The Black Fox," an American production, the film, after all, qualified itself as the best non-American documentary in the Oscar derby.

"Alvorada" dedicates itself to Brazil. It gives a substantial survey of the Brazilian people, the country's different landscapes, modern cities and old towns, and her arts and culture. It especially shows this South American state's rising industry. All this isn't done in a reporter's style. There's little narration. Niebeling's aim was to give impressions beyond information. In fact, he aimed at letting the foreign viewer personally "discover" Brazil.

Film mainly benefits from its outstanding color photography. Some of the Eastmancolor shots are indeed breathtakingly beautiful. The editing is superb and there's also a certain plus about Oskar Sala's electronic music.

Film, all in all, is very pretentious and both technically and artistically it's above the current German average. Pic has its weaknesses, too. Some may find the film overly pretentious and too jerky at times. For the screening there, the running time was cut from 83 to 75 minutes. "Alvorada," incidentally, was financed by the German steel factories of Mannesmann.

Sheherazade
(FRENCH-SUPERPANORAMA 70)
(Color)

Cannes, May 21.

Cinedis release of Speva Film-Cine Alliance-Filmsonor-Tecisa-Dear Film production. Stars Anna Karina, Gerard Barray; features Antonio Vilar, Marilu Tolo. Directed by Pierre Gaspard-Huit. Screenplay, Marc-Gilbert Sauvajon, Gaspard-Huit; camera (Eastmancolor), Christian Matras; editor, Louisette Hautecoeur. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 120 MINS.

Sheherazade ..... Anna Karina
Renaud ..... Gerard Barray
Haroun ..... Antonio Vilar
Shirin ..... Marilu Tolo

First French pic in 70m has some colorful and sharp lensing but too simple a storyline and treatment for anything but playoff chances abroad on its process and exotic qualities. Despite the screen size, there is only intermittent action and it looks probably a better bet at home.

Long ago a European emissary to a Moorish Sultan, to insure free roads to the Holy Land, saves a girl called Sheherazade and falls madly in love with her. But she is promised to the Sultan. Conspirators have them banished but it is through them the Sultan is saved, though mortally wounded, and they are reunited.

There is good color and the usual lush and fantasy-like court scenes. But actress Anna Karina seems too frisky and coltish for this sort of old-fashioned adventure film that needed an exotic type. Desert scenes, when the lovers are banished, fit the big screen well as do some court dance scenes. But there is not enough true adventure or bombastic action segments to give it a blockbuster flair.

This picks up Sheherazade after her Thousand and One Nights stories. It is a one-dimensional, lush love and adventure tale rather than a true fantasy as its title seems to imply. Film has all the tongue-in-cheek dramatics of yore but without a true dynamic dash either in direction and acting to make it a cut above the usual sand and spear epics of this genre. But the 70m process and color are good. Mosk.

Mosfilm production and release. With Margarita Volodina, Viatcheslav Tikhonov, Boris Andreev, Vsevelod Sanaev. Directed by Samson Samsonov. Screenplay, Sophie Vichnievskaia, Samsonov from play by Vsevelod Vichnievsky; camera, Vladimir Monakhov; music, Vassili Dekhterev. At Cannes Film Fest. Running time, 112 MINS.

Commissar ..... Margarita Volodina
Alexei ..... Viatcheslav Tikhonov
Presenter ..... Boris Andreev
Dumb One ..... Vsevelod Sanaev

Main plus in this look at the Russian Revolution is its black and white 70m format which gives it a true snap and size. But otherwise, it is an overdone and propagandistic look at the revoluton sans the true lyric collective sweep inherent in pre-war pix of this kind after which it is fashioned. It appears mainly for the home market.

A female commissar is sent among a bunch of anarchistic sailors in 1918 to weld them into a fighting unit and help save the revolution. She first shoots a would-be rapist in defense and then goes out to battle with the men to slowly win their respect.

Film resolutely is set against any individuality and the anarchists, without any chance of conversion, are wiped out. The commissar finally dies in combat against foreign anti-revolutionary troops to be hoisted up before the men to a heavenly chorus background.

Taken from a play, this film shows it via its prolonged talk scenes and lack of visual flair (despite its size) until the battle scenes. Acting is the usual overstated kind. Also, there is an attempt to mix music, heroic posing and epic events in a try for a poetic, romantic look at history.

But it just does not quite come off because of a lack of true filmic dash plus the mannered acting. Mosk.

The novelty devices designed to ignite "The List of Adrian Messenger" commercially backfire against it artistically. The result is a bizarre, but curiously irritating film experience. Discerning picturegoers will be annoyed to see distracting casting excesses mar a basically enthralling murder msytery otherwise executed with considerable cinematic vitality by director John Huston and staff. Yet, in spite of its major shortcomings, the Edward Lewis production and Universal release has the marquee might and offbeat allure to score favorably at the wicket windows.

Anthony Veiller's screenplay, based on a story by Philip MacDonald, is a kind of straight-laced version of "Kind Hearts and Coronets." It is the story of a retired British Intelligence officer's efforts to nab a killer who has ingeniously murdered 11 men who represent obstacles to his goal—the acquisition of a huge fortune to which he will become heir as soon as he eliminates the 12th obstacle, the 12-year-old grandson of his aged uncle, the wealthy Marquis of Gleneyre. The crimes have been accepted by the authorities as accidents until victim-to-be number 10, prior to his own "accidental" death, gets suspicious and activates the sleuthing machinery.

The film hums along smoothly and captivatingly until the killer, having disposed of number 11, shows up at the estate of the Marquis, where he plans to dispose of the lad from the inside. Here the story begins to fall apart. Since both Scotland Yard and our principal investigator (George C. Scott) are at this time fully aware of who and where their man is, and what he is up to, it is an incredibly contrived story distortion to suppose that they would let him roam about freely for several days—seriously jeopardizing the lives of several parties. The picture thus collapses in the final third of its course.

An even mare damaging miscue, in view of the fact that it seems to have been commercially motivated and unnecessarily leads the audience into a guessing game that not only distracts from the progress of the storyline but hinders believability, is the utilization of four stars who are hidden behind facial disguises in fundamentally inconsequential roles. In the first place, the artificiality of these putty faces is instantly apparent and, since there is no reason for these minor characters to be hiding behind grotesque masks, it makes no sense to the audience from a story viewpoint. Secondly, there is no reason for anyone but the killer to be disguising himself, and the fact that there seem to be disguises all over the place makes the murderer's use of it less provocative or effective. Thirdly, all this putty peeling begins to get downright monotonous towards the end. This casting brainstorm regretably turns out to be an artistic nuisance.

Some of the acting is first rate. Scott is especially convincing. Dana Wynter is marvelous to look at as the young heir's widowed mother. Clive Brook comes out of a 26-year retirement to portray the Marquis, and he does a sound job of it. The director's son, Walter Anthony, makes it a third generation on the screen for the gifted Huston family, and performs commendably. Others of prominence and value are Jacques Roux, Gladys Cooper, Herbert Marshall and John Merivale.

Of the five stars who "guest,"

FEST: QUALITY VS. DIPLOMACY

More Molasses for the Masses

Cannes, May 28.

A high echelon American film executive, characteristically nameless, feels that the U.S. majors should pull out of all film festivals. His logic is that Hollywood just does not make festival-type films. His advice: leave the annual competitions to non-Hollywood indies. Thus spare Yank commercial product fest embarrassments or knocks at U.S. prestige.

This is standard thesis: Hollywood makes films for its own and the world's mass audiences. Therefore entertainment is the goal. To this end easy narrative, simple characters and pussyfooting on touchy themes are adopted. However, other Americans dissent, call this ostrichism and isolationism thinking. Yanks have won two grand prizes at Cannes with "Marty" (UA) and "The Friendly Persuasion" (AA) plus many acting and special awards. The heavy star and personality turnouts have also enhanced U.S. prestige.

Such festival-revered past and some still-active filmakers as D. W. Griffith, Charles Chaplin, Eric Von Stroheim, King Vidor, Josef Von Sternberg, Howard Hawks, John Ford, Frank Capra, George Stevens and others all came out of the so-called commercial cinema. The carper feels that those were the heydays of more program pictures from which came the great American films.

Communist Product's Mixed Interest For Western Playoff; Cuba Villain: U.S.

Cannes, May 28.

In 1962 the films at Cannes from the Eastern Bloc countries showed signs of being in a quality slump, and pulled back into the more propagandistic styles. This year the films rated a notch better in some instances but, overall, not up to promise.

Russo "Optimistic Tragedy" was a big, sometimes rousing hymn to the revolution and the Communist heroes and seemed too blatant and old fashioned to have much export values. It seems to underline the retreat from the greater individualistic creative freedom that was evident in Soviet films a few years ago.

Poland still showed a more robust personal penchant in a tale of an actress thinking back over her wartime past via "The Art of Loving," but the film added nothing new in techniques, insight or execution. Hungary's "An Ordinary Street" was a fairly listless character study if it did show unrest in its almost middle class type characters finally reduced to resignation.

Bulgaria's "Tobacco" was a large-scale melodramatic look at the seedy capitalist class from 1930 till after the last war with an old fashioned envelope, while the Rumanian pic "Codine," made by a French director, was a simple tale of life in the Rumania of the 1900s and less hidebound than the others.

From Cuba came "The Other Christopher," also with a French director. This proved a surrealistic fantasy that tried to study Latin American revolutions and make a statement about them and U. S. interventions. It was just too bogged down in effects for their own sake to come off.

Czech fantasy, "One Day a Cat," successfully mixed individual self criticism and witty moralizing. Its use of color was also effective.

Gal 'Carpetbaggers'

Carroll Baker, Martha Hyer and Elizabeth Ashley have been cast as the femme leads in the Embassy-Paramount co-production "The Carpetbaggers," due to roll at Par next month.

Miss Baker will play Rina Marlowe, Miss Hyer will portray Jennie Denton and Miss Ashley will enact the role of Monica Winthrop. Previously set for male leading roles were Alan Ladd, George Peppard, Robert Cummings, Martin Balsam and Tony Bill. The selection of girls capped over two weeks of testing, in which Joseph E. Levine, Embassy prez, himself actively participated.

Shaw, Hong Kong, Eyeing West For His Local Pix

Cannes, May 28.

Motion pictures made by the Shaw Organization in Hong Kong depend mainly for their playoff on the South East Asian territories, but Run Run Shaw (who controls the group with his brother Runme) is now hoping to be able to penetrate the Western markets.

Speaking at a press conference after the screening of his company's "La Reine Diabolique" ("The Diabolical Queen") at the Cannes fest, Run Run Shaw said his company's films had had some playing time in the United States, but none "in this part of the world." He hoped that would change before long, emphasizing that his theatres played many Western imports, and a little two way trade would be in order.

The Shaw Organization which controls 128 theatres also owns three studios. Output is currently about 40-50 features a year, and this is being increased to about 60, including many spectacular productions costing $1,000,000 and upwards.

For the Cannes entry, the exec said the budget was around $1,000,000, but to ensure authenticity all the sets had been hand carved and the costumes hand made. It was produced in Shawscope which, of course, uses the C'Scope ratios.

PIDGEON ON CANADIAN SET FOR TRADE FILM

Montreal, May 28.

Canadian film industry has recruited Walter Pidgeon—himself a Canadian born in New Brunswick—to help mark the 60th anniversary of the first motion picture theatre in Canada.

Actor will appear in 20-minute short beign produced for the National Film Board by writer-producer William Weintraub. Pidgeon spent one week in Montreal on an NFB sound stage in suburban St. Laurent, where the film is beig made.

It'll be called simply "Anniversary" and will feature clips of films starring such Canadian stars as Mary Pickford, Norma Shearer, Marie Dressler, Walter Huston and Fay Wray.

Flick will be shown in all Canadian film houses, its premiere—taking place in Montreal June 6 in connection with an anni dinner sponsored by Canadian Motion Picture Pioneers.

Consultant on the pic is Hye Bossin, official historian for the Pioneers and tradepaper editor.

ROGER FERRI JOINS NAT'L SCREEN SERVICE

Roger Ferri has been appointed ad-pub director of National Screen Service succeeding Mel Gold who ankled recently to go into indie film production.

Ferri resigned last fall from 20th-Fox where he had been for many years, serving in a variety of homeoffice and studio promotional posts.

CANNES NOT UP TO '62 FEST

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Cannes, May 28.

There were a good number of unusual and worthy films at the recent 16th Cannes Film Fest, which concluded last Thurs. (23), but again too many ordinary and even poor features detracted from the pull and aura. It is evident that methods of scheduling product suitable for international exposure must be overhauled.

Festival president Robert Favre Le Bret and his Selection Council tried to discourage films felt not worthy of Cannes and not of the calibre to enhance the country involved. Some nations heeded this advice. Others did not.

Apparently the Council picked a second-rate Hungarian film over an excellent one, according to a Magyar rep, and allowed itself to be saddled with two French commercial releases it did not want. So teeth have to be in the fest's selection rights as well as insuring a choice of Council members.

Can anything be done against diplomatic pressures unless definite rules are passed enabling the fest to actually turn down a film not considered worthy? This is crucial. Quality is what makes or breaks a fest.

Presence of stars is important. So is the trading side and social aspects. Specialized showings and market angles have developed. But the competing films are the thing and they were not up to the high level set last year. Le Bret has intimated he will try to secure some measure of change and strengthen selection rules next year but it looks unlikely at this stage. If not in 1964, then when?

Under present rules fest accepts one film from each entered country and then has the right to invite others. This year the invited product fared well. U.S. Hollywood Guild Selection Committee chose "To Kill a Mockingbird" (U). It got an uneven reception and was felt too conventional in treatment for Cannes, though a b.o. hit in U.S. However the appearance of Gregory Peck helped the film's prestige and publicity value. The invited "What Ever Happened to Baby Jane?" (WB) got a solid boost from the still hefty appeal wielded by oldtime star Bette Davis. It drew mixed notices but did go over with audience and opened big in Paris right after its Cannes debut.

Prizegiving ceremony on Thurs. (23), was lively. Several awards were objected to via audience vociferation. Kudos showed too much diplomatic logrolling and two prizes literally had to be invented or resurrected to "give something" to the U.S.A., and the U.S.S.R.

Besides finding a way to get the best competing pix, Cannes had a jury problem also. It seemed that having six French members to five foreign gave too much of a block to the host country which could be used to push through a diplomatic rather than quality prize.

Gronich Predicts New U.S. Line, With Industry, Gov't Agreeing, On Policy Toward Main Fests

Cannes, May 28.

A new look and new era in U.S. industry and governmental film festival participation is in the offing according to continental Motion Picture Export Assn. head S. Frederick Gronich. If it will be more intensive and more coordinated it will still be in strict accordance with the Federation of International Film Producer Assn. rules.

It is also made clear that the FIFPA rulings will have to be adhered to by fests if they are to get active response from the members. Though near-future meetings pend, this may still mean fests cannot exceed 12 days. Cannes was 15 this year.

Industry and governmental representation at fests are expected to be merged for the U.S. with one nominal head, usually the national rep, presiding over the delegation so there will be no cross purposes in re State Dept. and industry aspects.

American Selection Committee, composed of two members each from the Hollywood Guilds and two Motion Picture Producer Assn. people voting as one, will choose official films for Cannes, Venice, Berlin, Moscow and its alternate Karlovy Vary, Mar Del Plata and Edinburgh. It will not do so for San Sebastien where individual majors decide their own entrees due to franchise conditions.

Selection group will henceforth also recommend films for invites besides the official one to stop the fest "shopping around" for stars and unusual exploitation pix. Gronich and governmental rep Allen Rivkin, also head of the U.S. Selection Committee, point out that all films, whether major or indies, will be taken into consideration of submitted and naturally the best will be sent to fests if possible.

Gronich makes it clear that the industry recognizes the prestige, publicity and dollars and cents values of festivals but wants to compete and put its best foot forward by eliminating squabbles and having a common front and outlooks towards all fests, with the FIFPA, eliminate internal jockeying for fest positions, invites and placement. This may also apply to non-competing pix.

Future meetings between MPAA head Eric Johnston and USIA Motion Picture director George Stevens Jr. will set up the new film fest modus vivendi for the U.S. industry and governmental methods. The choosing of short subjects may also be gone into. But a stable, comprehensive U.S. festival policy, in accord with the FIFPA, now looks set to avoid any more static U.S. representation at these major worldwide film fests.

Natural Partnership

Here's a tieup that really figures. Paramount, with its "Nutty Professor," and Planters Peanuts have a largescale joint promotion going.

Planters ads, including full pages in color in Life and Reader's Digest, feature Jerry Lewis as the film's title character. Campaign extends to super markets which will be working with theatres in hosting children's parties, with peanuts and photographs of Lewis given away.

Scripts, All Sizes We Got Em, Say Schenck-Zabel

Hollywood, May 28.

Schenck - Zabel Productions, which has spent two years building an inventory of film properties, now has 11 stories, all in completed shooting scripts, according to partners Aubrey Schenck and Edwin F. Zabel.

"This gives us an important advantage in that it simplifies the always-difficult problem of casting," Schenck reports. "We have polished scripts suitable for any one of dozens of name players as they may be available. Also, we can commit a player a year or even two years in advance because we have finished scripts which can be approved now."

Likely takoff film will be "Robinson Crusoe on Mars," written by Ib J. Melchior, former science editor of Life mag, based on the Daniel Defoe classic transferred to the space age, limning a "sky-wrecked" astronaut's efforts to survive on Mars.

Other top properties include "Ambush Bay," by Steve Fisher, factual story of the retaking of the Philippines by Gen. Douglas MacArthur; "Scent of New-Mown Hay," script by John C. Higgins; "The Young Wear Black," "The Camp," story of women's section of Dachau; "Clover," "Cheyenne Saturday."

S-Z also will activate a tv series based on Frank Buck's "Bring 'Em Back Alive" tome.

Interstate's Iffy Site

Houston, Tex., May 28.

Interstate Theatres has reportedly paid $375,000 for a 30 acre tract of land in the Clear Lake-NASA-Webster area.

At the present time no indication was given as to what purpose the land will be put to. The site is near the expanding space agency headquarters.

'Leopard' Collects Golden Palm

Cannes, May 28.

Cannes Film Festival which ended its 16th annual convocation last Thursday (23) bestowed the following awards:

TULIPAN'S NEW BEAT AS FERGUSON AIDE

Ira H. Tulipan, who joined Columbia in 1960 as assistant ad-pub director, has been appointed exec administrative assistant to Robert S. Ferguson, ad-pub v.p.

Tulipan will function in all promotional areas, also serving as liaison with the studio and overseas production. He had been associated with 20th-Fox and Warners before going to Col.

Goldbergs Get Adams

Detroit, May 28.

Adams Theatre, long a Balaban house in downtown Detroit, has been sold for an undisclosed sum to Community Theatres, per Norm Meyers, retiring manager of the theatre. The first-run theatre seats 1,700.

Community Theatres is controlled by the Goldberg twins. Chain operates nabe houses and ozoners in the Detroit area. Whether the Adams will continue its first-run policy could not be determined immediately.

L.A. Improves; 'Hud' Smash $28,000 Tops Newcomers, 'Cane' Crisp 24G, 'Canary' 11G, 'West' Wow 28G, 14

Los Angeles, May 28.

Firstruns here are picking up slightly this stanza with Memorial Day holiday helping. "Hud" is the new blockbuster with a smash $28,000 or near opening round at the Chinese. "Mondo Cane," in first general release, looks tall $24,000 in four theatres.

"Paranoiac" is after a fair $14,500 in three spots while "Yellow Canary" looms dull $11,000 or less in three locations.

"How West Was Won" continues to pace regular holdovers with a wow $28,000 in 14th session at Warner Hollywood. "Bye Bye Birdie" is showing staying power with $17,000 in eighth Hollywood Par lap. "Ugly American" is rated hefty $11,000 for eighth Pantages round.

Estimates for This Week

Chinese (FWC) (1,408; $2-$2.40) —"Hud" (Par). Socko $28,000 or near. Last week, with Loyola, Los Angeles, "To Kill a Mockingbird" (U), various 2d feature pix (3d wk), $15,900.

State, Iris, Loyola (Metropolitan-FWC) (2,404; 825; 1,298; $1-$1.49) —"Yellow Canary" (20th) and "Womanhunt" (20th). Dull $11,000 or close. Last week, State, Iris with Baldwin, Wiltern, Village, "In Cool of Day" (MGM), "North by Northwest" (MGM) (reissue), $21,300.

Lido (FWC) (876; $2) — "The Law" (Indie). Busy $3,500. Last week, "Trial" (Astor) (4th wk), $3,000.

Orpheum, Baldwin, Hollywood (Metropolitan-State-FWC) (2,213; 1,800; 856; $1-$1.25)—"Paranoiac" (U) and "Battle Beyond Sun" (Indie). Fair $14,500. Last week, Orpheum Hollywood, 'Operation

'Too Much'—'Harry' Nice $10,000, St. L.; 'Critics' 9G, 2d; 'West' Big 13G

St. Louis, May 28.

City is loaded with holdovers and some overly-extended longrun pix this session, and biz reflects this setup. Pair of oldies, "Man Who Knew Too Much" and "Trouble With Harry," shapes as well as any of fresh bills. Combo is rated nice at the St. Louis.

"Man From Diners' Club" looms average in second round at Esquire while "Critic's Choice" is rated okay in second at Fox. "Mind Benders," another newie, looms fair in first at Loew's Mid-City. "How West Was Won" is making best showing with a big take in seventh stanza at Martin Cinerama.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (Arthur) (2,970; $1.50-$2.75) — "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (9th wk). Fine $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

Apollo Art (Grace) (700; 90-$1.25)—"Follow Star" (Indie) and "Operation Snatch" (Indie). Okay $1,500. Last week, "Seventh Seal" (Indie) and "Secrets of Women" (Indie), $1,400.

Esquire (Jablonow-Komm) (1,880; 90-$1.25)—"Man From Diners' Club" (Col) (2d wk). Average $8,000. Last week, $10,000.

Fox (Arthur) (5,000; 90-$1.25)—"Critic's Choice" (WB) (2d wk). Okay $9,000. Last week, $12,000.

Loew's Mid-City (Loew) (1,160; 60-90)—"Mind Benders" (AI). Fair $8,000. Last week, "Constantine and Cross" (Embassy), $6,500.

State (Loew) (3,600; 60-90) — "Mutiny on Bounty" (MGM) (3d wk) (subrun). Okay $9,000. Last week, $10,000.

Martin Cinerama (Martin) (913; $$1.25-$2.50) — "How West Was Won" (MGM) (7th wk). Big $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

Pageant (Arthur) (1,000; 90-$1.25) — "Nine Hours To Rama" (20th). Good $3,000. Last week, "Trial" (Astor) (2d wk), $3,000.

St. Louis (Arthur) (3,800; 75-90)—"Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par) and "Trouble With Harry" (Par) (reissues). Nice $10,000. Last week, "War and Peace" (Par), $10,500.

Shady Oak (Arthur) (760; 90-$1.25)—"Long Day's Journey Into Night" (Embassy) (6th wk). Good $2,500. Last week, $3,000.

'Hud' Big $15,000, Denver; 'West' 20G

Denver, May 28.

Firstrun trade is mostly on the slow side currently, mainly because most are not shaping up well. However, one newcomer, "Hud," looms soeko at Paramount. "Yellow Canary," also new, is rated thin at Denham. "How West Was Won" still is great at the Cooper in 12th session, pushing up above last week via an extra performance.

Many holdovers are spotty, with reissues not helping. "Critic's Choice" is dropping to a mild figure in second round at the Denver.

Estimates for This Week

Aladdin (Fox) (900; $1.25-$2.75) —"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (8th wk). Good $8,500. Last week, $8,000.

Centre (Fox) (1,270; $1.25-$1.45) —"To Kill Mockingbird" (U) (8th wk). Okay $6,500. Last week, $8,000.

Cooper (Cooper) (814; $1.65-$2.50) — "How West Was Won" (MGM) (12th wk). Wow $20,000. Last week, $17,900.

Denham (Indie) (800; $1.25-$1.45) —"Yellow Canary" (20th). Thin $3,000. Last week, "Come Fly With Me" (MGM) (3d wk), $3,500.

Denver (Fox) (2,432; $1.25) — "Critic's Choice" (WB) and "Auntie Mame" (WB) (reissue) (2d wk). Mild $7,000. Last week, $9,500.

Esquire (Fox) (600; $1.25)—"The Trial" (Astor) (2d wk). Good $2,100. Last week, $3,200.

Orpheum (RKO) (2,690; $1.25)— "Ruby" (20th) and "Rebecca" (20th) (reissues). Drab $4,000. Last week, "The Birds" (U) (7th wk), $4,000.

Paramount (Wolfberg) (2,100; 90-$1.25) — "Hud" (Par) and "Where Truth Lies" (Indie). Sock $15,000 or near. Last week, "Dr. No" (UA) and "Amazons of Rome" (UA), $10,000.

Towne (Indie) (600; $1.25-$1.45) —"Free, White and 21" (AI) (3d wk). Sad $1,500. Last week, $2,000.

Vogue (Art Theatre Guild) (450; $1.25)—"No Exit" (Zenith). Big $1,700. Last week, "Sundays and Cybele" (Davis) (3d wk), $1,000.

'WEST' BEST IN SLOW COL., BOFFOLA $15,000

Columbus, O., May 28.

"How The West Was Won" at RKO Grand in seventh week expected to soar to wow $15,000, helped by several added shows. New pix generally are mild including "The Yellow Canary." "Come Fly With Me," and "I Could Go On Singing." Especially slow is "Come Fly" at the Ohio.

Estimates for This Week

Grand (RKO) (860; $1.50-$2.75) —"How West Was Won" (MGM) (7th wk). Wow $15,000. Last week, $8,500.

New Main (Sugarman) (1,100; 50-$1.25)—"I Could Go On Singing" (UA). Mild $1,400. Last week, "Man From Diners' Club" (Col), $1,600.

Ohio (Loew) (3,079; 50-$1.50)— "Come Fly With Me" (MGM) and "The Hook" (MGM). Sad $3,500. Last week, "Nine Hours to Rama" (20th) and "House of Damned" (20th) (5 days), $1,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,845; 50-$1.50)— "Yellow Canary" (20th) and "Police Nurse" (20th). Moredate $6,500. Last week, "Ugly American" (U) and "Frightened City" (AA), $7,500.

'Arabia' Good $5,000 In Dull Prov.; 'Madame' 7½G

Providence, May 28.

Apparently none of present mainstem product is strong enough to attract many normal cinema patrons, and all stands are mild currently. State is about the highest with "Madame," but even that is way below average. Elmwood is strong in 8th week of "Lawrence of Arabia." Majestic's reissue of "Giant" is rated okay. RKO Albee's "Paranoiac" is meek.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-95)— "Paranoiac" (U) and "Traitors" (U). Meek $3,000 expected. Last week, "Ugly American" (U) and "Showdown" (3d wk), $4,000.

Elmwood (Snider) (724; $2-$2.50) —"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (8th wk). Fairly good $5,000 after $5,500 in seventh round.

Majestic (Snider) (2,200; 75-90) —"Giant" (WB) (reissue). Okay $4,500. Last week, "Marines, Let's Go" (20th) and "Sink Bismarck" (20th) (reissues), $5,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-90)— "Madame" (Embassy) and "Face in Rain" (Embassy). Slow $7,500. Last week, "Come Fly With Me" (MGM) and "Joseph and Brethren" (MGM), $7,000.

Strand (National Realty) (2,200; (Par) and "All In Night's Work" (Par) (reissues). Fair $3,000 in 5-day stand.

'West' Great 17G, Mpls.; 'Critics' 5G

Minneapolis, May 28.

Only a few newcomers on the local scene currently and none is of major quality calculated to give the boxoffice a boost. Among the abundant holdovers that are staying on are "How West Was Won" and "Lawrence of Arabia," the roadshow films.

"To Kill a Mockingbird" and "Divorce, Italian Style" have had long stays. Another pair departing after much shorter visits are "Critic's Choice" and "Dr. No," both giving good accounts of themselves. Unseasonable cold weather seems to be of no help at the wickets.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (1,000; $1.55-$2.65)—"Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (6th wk). Stout $8,000. Last week, $9,000.

Avalon (Frank) (800; $1) "Europe in Raw" (Indie) and "Two-Way Stretch" (Indie) (reissue). Okay $1,400.

Campus (Mann) (600; $1)—"Girl With Golden Eyes" (Union). Okay $1,100. Last week, "Arturo's Island" (MGM), $1,000.

Century (Par) (1,300; $1-$1.25)— "Lafayette" (Indie) (2d wk). Mild $3,000 in five days. Last week, $4,500.

Cooper (CF) (805; $1.25-$2.50)— "How West Was Won" (MGM) (11th wk). Wow $17,000. Last week, $16,200.

El Lago (Carisch) (800; $1)—"Mr. Peter's Pets" (Indie) and "Night Affairs" (Indie) (2d runs). Moderate $1,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; $1-$1.25) —"Drums of Africa" (MGM). Tepid $2,500. Last week, "Hercules and Captive Women" (Woolner), $4,000.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; $1-$1.25)— "Battle Beyond Sun" (AI) and "Night Tide" (AI). Slow $3,000. Last week, "Joseph and Brethren" (Colorama), $3,500.

Mann (Mann) (1,000; $1-$1.25)— "Dr. No" (UA) (m.o.) (3d wk). Brisk $8,000 in nine days. Last week, "Birds" (U) (6th wk), $2,000 in three days.

Orpheum (Mann) (2,800; $1-$1.25) —"Quick in Dead" (Indie) and "Between Heaven and Hell" (Indie) (2d run). Opened Sunday (26). Tiny $1,500 in three days. "Hud" (Par) opens May 29. Last week, "Dr. No" (UA) (2d wk), $3,500 in three days.

Park (Mann) (1,000; $1.50)— "Divorce, Italian Style" (Embassy) (6th wk). Lively $3,500. Last week, $3,000.

State (Par) (2,200; $1-$1.25) — "Critic's Choice" (WB) (2d wk). Fair $5,000. Last week, $10,000.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; $1) —"Saturday Night, Sunday Morning" (Cont) and "Room at Top" (Cont) (reissues). Okay $2,500. Last week, "Some Kind of Nut" (Indie), $2,000 in five days.

World (Mann) (400; $1.25-$1.50) —"To Kill Mockingbird" (U) (14th wk). Hot $2,500 in five days. Last week, $3,500.

Detroit, May 28.

New titles are going up on the downtown marquees, but with one exception it's the long-termers which still are attracting the most paying customers. The exception is "The Stripper" which looks great in first peel at the Palms. "Drums of Africa" shapes slow at Fox. "Knights of Black Cross" is dull at the Michigan. "It Happened at the World's Fair" looks moderate at Grand Circus. "Ugly American" appears to be getting off to a sluggish start at the United Artists.

Meanwhile, "Lawrence of Arabia" stays big in 17th session at Madison. "How West Was Won" is wham in 13th roundup at Music Hall. "To Kill A Mockingbird" stays hot in eighth week at the Mercury.

K.C. Mild But 'Singing' Stout $5,000, 'West' Hot 9G, 'Birds' Strong 7G

Kansas City, May 28.

Session is mild via modest newcomers. "First Spaceship on Venus" at Uptown-Granada shapes moderate while "I Could Go On Singing" at the Brookside shapes sturdy. Multiple run of "Paranoiac" in five theatres is rated light. Best money is with the holdovers. "How The West Was Won" at the Empire continues strong in ninth. "Birds" at Plaza shapes solid in fourth round. Weather switched from unseasonably cool trend to rain for weekend.

Estimates for This Week

Brookside (Fox Midwest-Nat. Gen. Corp.) (800; $1-$1.25)—"I Could Go On Singing" (UA) and "Two for Seesaw" (UA) (2d run). Surprisingly good $5,000 or near. Last week, "Nine Hours to Live" (20th), changed from usual "Nine Hours To Rama" to go $2,000.

B'way Marks Time; 'Mountain' Okay 130G, 2d; 'Heavens' Mighty $24,500, 'Ugly' Nice 23G, 'Singing' $15,700

Broadway firstrun theatres are just coasting currently. Many exhibitors are bringing in new screen fare starting as of yesterday (Tues.) to take advantage of any holiday upbeat. Not too much is expected at the wickets today (Wed.), with outoftowners not yet arrived and local residents starting out of the city for the Thursday holiday—and the long holiday weekend for some.

Lone newcomers are meeting varying success. "Paranoiac" did only a mild $10,000 in first week at the Victoria but was comparatively stronger at $5,000 on initial stanza at the Baronet. "Heavens Above" is credited with a smash $24,500 opening session at the Sutton, close to the house high money mark.

"Spencer's Mountain" with stageshow is heading for a nice $130,000 in second week at the Music Hall. Stays a third stanza. "Ugly American" looks to hold with big $23,000 in seventh round daydating the Rivoli and Trans-Lux East.

"I Could Go On Singing" hit okay $15,700 in second round, daydating the Astor and Trans-Lux 85th Street. "55 Days at Peking" opens daydate at the Palace, New RKO 23d Street and T-L 85th Street. "The Birds" just wound a highly successful run of nearly nine weeks at the Palace.

"Hud" preemed yesterday (Tues.) at the Paramount and arty Coronet. "List of Adrian Messenger" opens today (Wed.), daydating the Warner and Trans-Lux 52d Street. "Longest Day" wound a highly profitable longrun of 23 weeks and three days last Sunday (26) at the Warner. "Wrong Arm of Law" still was in the chips in its eighth session at the Coronet.

Aided by seven extra shows, including a midnight show last Saturday, "How West Was Won" climbed to a smash $41,000 in its ninth stanza at the Cinerama. "Lawrence of Arabia" held with boffo $40,000 in 23d session at the Criterion. "Mutiny on Bounty" is heading for a fine $17,000 in 28th week at the State.

'West' Wham 13G, Milw.; 'Dr. No' 5G

Milwaukee, May 28.

With the exception of "How West Was Won," which continues great in sixth round at Palace Cinerama, Milwaukee film big shapes mainly sluggish. "Lawrence of Arabia" is rated fair in sixth at Strand.

Estimates for This Week

Downer (Cinema, Inc.) (600; $1) —"Lovers of Teruel" (Cont). NSH $1,600. Last week, "Girl With Golden Eyes" (Union), $2,200.

'Hud' Boffo 10G, Cincy; 'Stallions' Sock $9,500; 'West' Mighty 10G, 11th

Cincinnati, May 28.

Hefty potential of newcomers "Hud" at Grand and "Miracle of White Stallions" at Keith's bids to overcome declines of holdovers this week on Cincy's film front. Openings of Coney Island's regular season and 88-day racing meet at River Downs plus home stand of Reds baseball club are among the outdoor lures.

Entry of "Paranoiac" and "Traitors" looks thin at the Albee. Reissues of "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" and "Last Train From Gun Hill" shape fairish at the Palace. Reserve seaters "How West Was Won" at Capitol in 11th week and "Lawrence of Arabia" at the Valley in seventh continue strongly.

'Cleo' Set to Open in London July 31; See 50 European Dates by Winter

London, May 28.

"Cleopatra" will open at the Dominion Theatre on July 31 with a gala European preem in aid of the Newspaper Press Fund. The deal between 20th-Fox and the Rank Organization was sealed by the signing of the contract and the handing over of a check for $840,000 by Kenneth Winckles, managing director of the Rank Organization, to Percy Livingstone, his opposite number at 20th-Fox. The $840,000 was described as "an advance, non-returnable guarantee for the Dominion engagement.

"Cleo" will run at the Dominion on a hardticket basis of 13 performances weekly at prices ranging from $1.40 to $4.20, which Livingstone pointed out was similar to the price league of the best West End legit shows. Livingstone stated: "This is a new phase in the history of show business in the U.K. The guarantee is considerably larger than any ever paid before, not only in the film world but in any sphere of show business."

Both organizations had already received a flood of inquiries for bookings and the advance booking office at the Dominion was opened yesterday (Mon.), nine weeks before the preem. The 1,700-seat Dominion is the theatre at which 20th-Fox' "South Pacific" had a record run of four years and five months. The house will have its bars enlarged and new decorations for the "Cleopatra" run.

No library deal has yet been negotiated and nothing definite has been fixed regarding the showing of the film in the provinces. But Winckles and Livingstone agreed that "it was highly likely that, before Christmas, it will be screened at Birmingham, Manchester, Newcastle and Glasgow."

As for Europe, it is expected that by early winter "Cleo" will be playing in about 50 cities. The signing confab was conducted in affable, optimistic mood but it was obvious throughout that the execs are tensed up about the future of a film which started off as a modest project but now has negative costs estimated at $34,000,000 plus print and publicity costs as well as distribution charges.

Current film at the Dominion, Samuel Bronston's "55 Days at Peking," will be switched to the Odeon, Haymarket. It's doing solid boxoffice biz at the Dominion.

May Cut Overhead Of Scot Festival

Edinburgh, May 28.

A bid is being made here to cut costs of the major International Edinburgh Festival, which was $345,000 in the red last year. Festival Society members are being urged to call a special meeting to discuss ways of pruning the costs, and support for the meeting is being sought in a city-wide petition.

The new civic head of Edinburgh, Lord Provost Duncan Weatherstone, said that although he would consider any moves to improve the financial setup of the arts arena, it was nevertheless obvious that art would continue to need a subsidy. The Festival, he claims, is a "credit to the city."

Other councillors favor a "hard look at the finances," or contend that the people who derive most benefit from the festival, such as hoteliers and shopkeepers, should make a greater financial contribution.

717 Japanese Cinemas Closed Since August

Tokyo, May 21.

Count of Japan's film houses as of the end of March showed a total of 6,091, a drop of 717 from the figure at the end of last August. During the period, 305 cinemas have been permanently shuttered, 386 closed with hopes and reopening and 26 razed by fire.

Regional totals in March count show 2,232 in Kamto (including Tokyo and Yokohama), 1,708 in Kansai (including Osaka, Kobe and Kyoto), 904 in Kyushu, 681 in Chubu and 566 in Hokkaido.

EAST GERMANS LIKE WESTERN PIX MOST

Frankfurt, May 28.

Apparently no matter how many propaganda-loaded films the East Germans are turning out at home, the vast public in the Communist country prefers imports from western lands.

In a public survey conducted by the weekly cultural paper Der Sonntag (The Sunday), of 34 popular films or ones that the East German critics especially favored, only eight originated from DEFA, the state-run film-making monopoly, and these ranked at the bottom of the list.

Favorites were "Rocco and His Brothers," "Stage Clear for Marika" and "Ghost Castle in the Spessart," the first an Italian pic and the others from West Germany. Russian films, including one that received the most critical acclaim, "Slaughter at the Way," came in only 15th and below on the rating.

In the past, the audiences have found that the highly praised pixs were disappointments, and such recent DEFA films as "Murder Without Atonement" and "Death Has a Face" and "On the Sunny Side," despite high praise, were totally unknown to about half of the people polled in the study.

Film Shortage Hurts Sun. Biz In Liverpool

Liverpool, May 28.

Shortage of film product is making it very difficult to get special programs for showing on Sundays, exhibs were told here. If the average exhib could not show his normal program on Sundays, he was compelled to use old films.

K. B. Lloyd said the Southport Entertainment Houses Assn. had decided to approach the chief of police to discuss the showing of "X" films on Sundays. There was no express condition of the license, he said, to prevent "X" films from being screened on Sundays although they were not shown on that day. The applicable condition stated that the licensee would exercise strict surveillance over all programs on Sundays.

It was proposed to explain to the chief constable, he said, about the difficulty in getting product. And also that by not showing "X" films on Sundays, business was being lost because people went elsewhere to see such pix.

Another exhib, R. H. Godfrey, said it was important to show up-to-date product, including "X" films, on Sundays, to attract patrons. He said exhibs were not exploiting the position in respect of "X" films if they were shown for seven days.

VIDES OF ROME IN LUX-ULTRA DEAR TIE

Rome, May 28.

Vides Films of Rome has made a production-distribution pack linking it with Lux Films, Ultra Films and Dear Films. Agreement covers seven features in production or to be made this year.

Pix are: "La Ragazza di Bube" (Bebo's Girl), with George Chakiris and Claudia Cardinale; "Sedotta ed Abbandonata" (Seduced and Abandoned), directed by Pietro Germi; "Omicron," directed by Ugo Gregoretti; "Gli Indifferenti" (The Indifferent Ones); "Baron Fefe," directed by Alfredo Giannetti, with Marcello Mastroianni; "L'Antimiracolo" (The Phony Boom); and "Para" (The Paratrooper), directed by Gillo Pontecorvo.

All seven will be released in Italy by Lux-Paramount. A second group of four pix planned by production combo will instead be released in Italy by the new Dear-Fox setup. Franco Cristaldi is producer of all 11 items.

Associative pact, per company announcement, is "designed to give Italo pic industry more vital product designed for ever vaster markets."

Congress of Spain Exhibs to Mull Tax Setup, TV Threat, More Imports

Madrid, May 28.

Hundreds of film exhibitors from all parts of Spain opened their second Congress today in the National Sindicato headquarters for three days of talks and discussion that are expected to center on many vital industry problems.

Congress organizers, headed by Vicente Guillo, have included the agenda such items as exhib petitions for commercial freedom and professional secrecy, unification of taxes and limitation of new cinema houses. A pact with state-controlled tv to reduce the small-screen blight on pix and increased film imports leading to no-quota import freedom in three years are other items expected to come before the Congress.

Congress decisions are also expected to touch on obligatory screen time for Spanish pix, newspaper, radio and television advertising costs. In addition, increasing competition from parochial schools and film clubs plus the problem of summer film exploitation are expected to come up.

Germany's 28-Year-Old Prod. Plans 2 More Pix

Frankfurt, May 21.

Germany's youngest film producer, 28-year-old Hansjuergen Pohland, is planning two more pix productions in this country where local productions are in increasingly short supply.

He has started work on the criminal satire titled, "The Dead from Beverly Hills," by Curt Goetz. Later in the summer he will film "Tennis Play," starring Liselotte Pulver (known in the States as Lilo Pulver), with the film directed by her sister, Corinne Pulver. This will be the latter's first feature film production, she having previously made tele pix.

Sydney Film Fest June 7-20 This Yr.

Sydney, May 21.

Once considered strictly for longhair patronage, Aussie film festivals have expanded tremendously in recent times and today are highly popular with many others in this key city, who pay their $6 admission along with the local 400 and other bluebloods.

Upbeat in film fest popularity is figured out by the high rate of patrons attending around eight foreign lingo cinemas here. Today in this territory, foreign producers are anxious to get pix on the fest screen so that foreign house operators may be persuaded to playdate pix given the fest seals.

Keen showmanship by sponsors of the Sydney Film Festival, with Ian Klava directing operations, is creating sellout biz for the new season set to start June 7, and run through to June 20. This year's fest will be held at the University of Sydney and the Sydney Technical College, with four auditoriums in operation.

Product scheduled for screening at this year's fest includes "Shoot The Pianist" (France), "The Bodyguard" (Japan), "Darling" (Finland), "Silent Planet" (East Germany), "The Possessed" (Hungary), "Night Tide" (U.S.), "First Love" (Netherlands), "Three Times Ana" (Argentina), "Innocent Sorcerers" (Poland) and "Baron Munchausen" (Czech).

English-Language Pix Led Singapore in '62; 'Day' Best Yank Film

Singapore, May 21.

English-language films again led the field here last year when 266, British and U.S., were shown. This is against three from Russia, 50 Mandarin pics from Hong Kong, 15 films from Communist China, 208 Cantonese films from "various sources," 111 from India, 22 from Japan, 21 from Halaya and 41 from elsewhere. In all, 727 pix were released.

The American film bringing top returns was "The Longest Day" (20th), which landed $82,000 on playdates covering 56 days during October to X'mas.

Best done Chinese film was Cathay's "Third Sister Liew" which did $144,333.

'Doctor No,' 'Spartacus' High on Granada List

London, May 21.

Seven British films and three American pix made the top 10 of Granada's half yearly boxoffice survey, ended last March 31. First three were "Summer Holiday," with Cliff Richard; "On the Beat," the Norman Wisdom farce, and "Doctor No," first of the James Bond pictures. Then came America's "Spartacus," followed by Britain's "L-Shaped Room," "Sparrows Can't Sing," the reissue of "Bridge on River Kwai" and Disney's "The Castaways."

Last two places were notched by "Sodom and Gomorrah" and the general release of "South Pacific."

Anti-Spain Feeling Up In Sweden and Denmark Over Grimau Execution

Stockholm, May 21.

Anti-Franco sentiments recently came to the surface in Sweden and Denmark. The other day Stockholm's Municipal Theatre announced that it had cancelled Antonio's dance troupe guest appearance, which was scheduled as one of the first and major events at the Stockholm Festival (May 28-June 19). Lars-Levi Laestadium, head of the Stockholm theatre, announced that after the storm of protests over the execution of Julian Grimau, a Communist, for alleged crimes during the Spanish Civil War, the theatre considered breaking its contract with Antonio.

When the Spanish government's Tourist Office here started to advertise Antonio's appearance as part of a "Spanish Week," the Stockholm theatre did break the contract. Troupe will be replaced on the festival schedule by a Swedish production of Bert Brecht's "The Caucasian Chalk Circle."

A "Spanish Week" had been scheduled in Copenhagen for May 15-21. Plans called for the presentation of Spanish art, ballet, concerts and films. However, after the execution of Grimau, the plans were met by a good deal of opposition frm Danish intellectuals, students and government officials. Consequently, the Spanish embassy decided to cancel the plans.

'BIRDS' TO SHOCHIKU FOR 1ST JAPAN DATE

Tokyo, May 28.

Alfred Hitchcock's "The Birds" (U) will open early in July at the Shochiku Piccadilly, where "West Side Story" (UA) recently completed a record roadshow run for Japan. This decision ended furious bidding between Shochiku and its rival Toho circuits for the chiller pic. Competish for the film was so keen that it received considerable attention in the consumer as well as the trade press here.

Universal's choice of this circuit seems to make further inroads in the Toho exhib chain, which was in a virtual monopolistic situation until not so long ago. But with UA and Disney having diverted its product to the Shochiku and Tokyu houses several years ago, and with 20th-Fox playing its boffo "Longest Day" in those circuits, the Toho stranglehold on foreign film situations is weakened.

Alvin I. Cassel, U's Japan manager, says the Shochiku pact for "The Birds" calls for a mimimum run of 17 weeks at the 1,380-seat Piccadilly, with balcony seat prices hiked to a top of $2.80. Policy will be soft ticket, with picture showing three times daily and four times on Sundays and holidays.

In this country where cinema patrons have an alert awareness of directors, Hitchcock is one of the most popular. It is hoped that he will be able to come here to help promote the preem.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

To paraphrase Billy Wilder, who once suggested there should be an Oscar for the year's best deal, there might also be an Oscar for the year's most fanciful production asked. If there ever is, young (33) Indianapolis-born producer-director Larry Frisch may be a leading nominee. Frisch left New York last week with wife and four children (ranging from 11 down to four years of age) on a round-the-world junket during which he expects to hit Copenhagen, Warsaw, Tel Aviv, Bombay and, eventually, The Bronx, with a possible pic deal in any—or all—of the stops.

Frisch, who already has two Israeli features ("Tel Aviv Taxi" and "Pillar of Fire") and one Greek ("Casablan") film to his credit, is flexible in the extreme. He settles down in New York directing documentary and industrial pix for others (most recent: "The Power of A Pot Roast" for the U.S. Employment Service) just long enough to get a little dough ahead to finance his own varied projects wherever they may be finalized. Thus he came to shoot "Casablan," based on an Israeli play, last summer in Greece. With $25,000 from a South African well-wisher, plus the backing of Anzervos Studios of Athens, he turned out that pic for $66,000.

Among the possibilities for this summer are a science fiction "sex comedy" (Denmark); "Miracle in Warsaw," story of a Jewish girl's survival of World War II; a deal with Indian producer Ahsan Khan to make a western-oriented version of one Khan's Indian spectaculars, while the Indian pic is being shot; another Israeli comedy; and/or, back home, "Triumph of Love," based on the Simon & Schuster book by Bronx housewife Leona Bruckner, whose child was born without arms.

Frank Sullivan, in an editorial written for the Albany Times-Union, on the death of Monty Woolley, commented: "To be called a trouper is the noblest epithet an actor can earn and Md. Woolley fully deserves that epithet. One instance may be recounted. He had a leading role in the film about his old Yale friend and pupil, Cole Porter, and while it was in the making, Monty became critically and painfully ill. He had one last scene to make, and he had related how on that day, after being given an injection of morphine, he left the hospital in care of a nurse, went to the studio and made the scene in such agony that when it was finished, he fell in a faint. That's being a real trouper."

Sullivan continued: "Monty was a highly rare species of film star. He had a master's degree from both Yale and Harvard, and an honorary degree from Williams."

Pace Company, operating suburban twin studio art cinema, at Winnipeg, Canada, is entering the concert and artists field. First bookings include Mantovani and selected Moiseyev Dancers arranged through the offices of Canadian Concerts and Artists of Montreal. Mantovani is set for the Civic Auditorium on June 15, and the Moiseyev for two dates during the first week in August at the 10,000-seat Arena.

In an item headlined "end of the roadshows," Allied States Assn. announced to its membership in its latest "Allied Report" that "it would appear that exhibitors will soon be relieved of one trial and tribulation which has been imposed upon the industry. 'The Fall of the Roman Empire' is the only picture now in production which is projected for hardticket roadshow release."

"The blockbusters have boomeranged," readers are told and the item continues that "experience with roadshows has resulted in financial disaster for several film companies. Those companies which steered clear of the restricted roadshow market and continued to supply boxoffice attractions for general release are prosperous and in sound financial condition."

The opinion is also ventured that "'Cleopatra' may literally be 'the roadshow to end all roadshows.'"

Nicholas Luard, one of the leaders of Britain's satirical movement, owner of the satirical Soho night club, the Establishment, and publisher of the satirical manazine, "The Private Eye," came to Cannes Film Festival on a 24-hour quickie last Thursday (16) to host a press conference for the launching of his upcoming production of "The Christine Keeler Story." Miss Keeler, of course, is the model who hit the world's headlines when she skipped the country instead of giving evidence in a criminal prosecution, and was the subject of a subsequent statement in the House of Commons by a Minister who admitted he had met her at several social functions. According to Luard, the film is to be treated seriously, with a "Dolce Vita" approach to the story of a young girl who comes up from the provinces and gets involved in the gay whirl of London.

Cornel Wilde who stands in the double jeopardy position of being both star and producer of "Lancelot and Guinevere" confesses his kitters in advance as to the film critics of Britain "knowing how they have massacred other American attempts to film any of their history." Actually the British reviews have been quite good. Wilde was especially happy that none cracked against the British accept Jean Wallace as the erring queen. Jack Bently in the London Sunday Mirror after describing his "foreboding" called the film in "unusually good taste." British scribes were high on the swordplay, per Dick Richards (Daily Mirror), Philip Oakes (Sunday Telegraph) Pauline Richardson (New Daily).

International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees posted total assets of $1,435,364 in 1962 in its general fund by comparison to $1,519,208 the previous year. Liabilities for '62 were $55,405 as opposed to a total of $59,085 in 1961. Net worth in '62 was $1,379,959 while worth the previous year was $1,460,122, in the general fund.

Total assets in the union's Class B Department fund were $1,316 in 1962, compared to $6,620 the year before. Liabilities in '62 were $1,018, as against $732 in 1961. Net worth last year was $299 and $5,888 in '61.

Minnesota film circuit owner Bennie Berger declares he's giving up the Minneapolis International Hockey League team and franchise. If he's unable to sell the club this week he'll auction off the players to other of the league's clubs. The reason, Berger says, is that he and his associates have lost $75,000 the past three seasons and "we can't take it any more." He attributes the flop to lack of adequate facilities for the games here.

Rule-of-Market-Supply Compels Marginal Situations To Go 'Foreign'

LIZ TAYLOR'S BIG SUR LOCATION FOR WYLER

Deal was finalized this week under which Elizabeth Taylor will star in "The Sandpiper" for producer Martin Ransohoff and Columbia, with William Wyler directing. Project is to roll next fall, locating in California's Big Sur area, with interior at the Col studio in Hollywood. It's to be Miss Taylor's first States picture since Metro's "Butterfield 8" in 1960.

Production is to be the first of two made by Ransohoff's Filmways Inc. for Col distribution. Male co-star for Miss Taylor has yet to be set for the story of romance between an artist, Miss Taylor, living in Carmel, Calif., and a minister who heads a boys' school. Screenplay is by Irene and Louis Kamp from an original story by Ransohoff.

Mosfilm

lease outside the Russ block countries.

According to Surin, the western press had read too much significance into the recent-appointment of Aleksei V. Romanov as chairman of the newly created Soviet Cinematography Board. Said Surin, the appointment, which western observers saw as part of the Kremlin's ideological crackdown on the arts, was principally necessitated by the rapid growth of the Russ film industry since 1956. The film industry heretofore had been under the jurisdiction of Mme. Yekaterina Furtseva, Soviet Culture Minister. He did say, however, that with the huge increase in the number of Russ films being made, there were some being made that were not exactly good.

Asked whether or not it isn't difficult to define a "good" film, Surin said it isn't difficult at all. Soviet films "must serve the best interests of the people," and films which do not do that simply are not "good." In any case, it was indicated, the new Russ film industry set up will have no effect on the completion of the Cowan coproduction.

Surin, whose Mosfilm alone turns out 40 features a year and is now shooting a five-hour, two-part version of "War and Peace," took time during his New York stay to see the 70m "Lawrence of Arabia," whose photography he called "excellent," though the content of the film did not impress him. He also praised all aspects of the 70m "West Side Story," which he reported had been denied sale to the USSR, apparently on the grounds that it would not show the U.S. in an attractive light to the Russ filmgoer. Surin, noting that "West Side" is a smash all over the world, including Japan, felt the decision underestimated the intelligence of Russ audiences.

(U.S. distribs are not too anxious to sell a film like "West Side Story" at what they deem too static a figure, $60,000. USSR is believed to make 1,500 prints. —Ed)

Asked whether the Mosfilm decision to shoot "War and Peace" resulted from the Russ dissatisfaction with the multi-national Ponti-DeLaurentiis 1956 version, which was released in Russia, Surin replied that that film had had wide acceptance in Russia. In fact, he thought it a very honest film. "Still, we feel we can do it more profoundly, with more fidelity to the Tolstoy philosophy." It is, after all, a Russian—not an Italian—classic.

Surin does not necessarily believe that a film industry should be bound by the literary heritage of its own culture. He pointed out that the Soviets have made great film use out of Shakespeare's plays, with "Othello," "Merry Wives of Windsor" and "Hamlet," adapted, among others. They have also dipped into the O. Henry library with success.

Exec reported there are only about 20 theatres in the USSR now equipped to show 70m pix, but that the six or seven big negative Russ productions to date have received thorough playoff via their 35m, printdown versions.

WB Hits Sunday 'Rub-In' By Critic Judith Crist; She's Miss Non Grata

Reacting to critical comments and a Sunday followup piece on "Spencer's Mountain" by N.Y. Hearld-Tribune film critic Judith Crist, Warner Bros. has severed its relations with the daily, cutting off its advertising, publicity and screenings. Radio City Music Hall, where the picture is playing and which was chided for booking it (and other practices) in the Sunday piece, has reduced its ad lineage in the paper.

"It was the Sunday piece that blew the roof off," a Warner spokesman commented. Music Hall prez and managing director Russell V. Downing declined remark.

The WB spokesman noted that the company was particularly burned "because of the attack on the morality and policies of the Music Hall." The decision to sever relations with the Trib got the blessings of Warner prez Jack L. Warner and exec v.p. Ben Kalmenson, both of whom were reported "incensed" at some of Miss Crist's remarks, feeling that they were "uncalled for."

"They want nothing whatever to do with that paper," the spokesman commented. He also noted that the Herald-Trib. has "always been relegated to a lesser role in our advertising schedules and the effect of not going into the Trib will have no effect on our business."

Miss Crist, who succeeded Paul V. Beckley as the Trib's film critic following the Gotham press blackout and was previously the paper's editor for the arts, branded the Warner move "infantile." She noted that she received more letters commenting on her remarks in the article in question, most of them favorable, than she has ever gotten before, over 25 between Sunday publication and Wednesday.

As it happens, the critic, who is generally rated as tough, has rapped every WB pic she's caught since taking over the job, with the exception of "Days of Wine and Roses" on which she was very high. If she wants to review any further Warner product, she'll now have to pay for the privilege at a local theatre, after its opening.

tion market. We make pictures only for ourselves." For that matter, they also eschew the "snek preview" policy to gauge audience reaction. "After I see the first 'married print,' that's it. I never see the picture again—if I can possibly avoid it."

There is nothing so sacred in life, according to Roy, that it cannot be satirized—and that would include himself. He noted the changing mores in Britain since the war. Pre-war Britons would never display affection in public—now, anything goes. His comment: "It's all to the good, I suppose, but perhaps I'm getting old. I couldn't fall into a heavy embrace in the middle of the road. It might frighten the horses."

Various subrun houses are switching from standard feature presentations to artie programming. Also ozoners in instances are moving into more class operations, even going into single feature dating with dressed up surroundings, to assume aura as "first run."

There isn't as much "depth of playoff" as there used to be. Resultantly, subrun exhibs find themselves strapped for product and turn to artie policies to find new type, and more product.

In order for a subsequent house to make it in many areas, it must be in on the first or second wave of a multiple break or involved in a showcase setup such as UA's Gotham Premiere Showcase or Universal's perimeter plan. Beyond these alternatives, there isn't too much playtime left in pix and those exhibs who depend on runs below these lines are in trouble. Clearances are also tighter due to the hobgoblin of antitrust.

Foreign pictures offer a number of potential advantages to these troubled exhibs. For one thing, it gives them product to play. But more importantly the kind of product coming out of the foreign studios can often stay longer in a theatre and build, as opposed to the hit and run nature of much available domestic pix. By operating with a tight seating capacity and lower overhead, via the art plan, exhibs can book these pix and run with them for a while without being constantly in a struggle over where their next attraction is coming from. Many new exhibs are only building art-styled houses for the dual protection of being able to play the domestic as well as foreign films.

In the ozone field, some elements of the changes taking place are more startling. Some driveins are becoming virtual first run houses in their areas. They are booking single features with maybe a short or the like. This moves the departure time from the theatre up to a more reasonable hour for some people who have complained about not getting home until 1 a.m. after seeing an ozoner program.

Some theatres are even going so for as to hafe coffee served, a la the art houses, and others have dressed up their decor to be more attractive and have a plushier tone. Others are trying experiments to try and keep the numbers of noisy children from running all over the lot while a feature is in progress, some even eliminating the kids free plan.

But this ozone experiment is on a smaller scale than the change undreway in the subrun field. There'll still be plenty of places for young couples to "park" and family night will prevail all summer long at most situations. But, by the same token, there are areas in which the no-tops have grown to firstrun status and get top pix first in their areas.

Carl Foreman Opts For All Main Functions In One

"The only way to make films is to have one man function as producer, director and writer," filmmaker Carl Foreman stated Sunday (25). He was seen in a 15-minute film concerning himself and his new picture, "The Victors," over ABC-TV.

"Ideally," commented Foreman, "if you have the strength for it, and that vocation, I think it's the only way to make films so that the end result is the work of one man and what the audience is seeing is the expression of one man." An Ingemar Bergman picture, for example, has the individual trademark on it and, like it or not, "you know that the end result has not been adulterated by a committee," added Forman.

Foreman related that he'd like to include in his future plans a production that shows honestly and clearly what America is like and what the American people are like. He said his aim would be to "correct the somewhat distorted and unfortunate impressions that I think people overseas have been getting since the war."

AA's 'Black Zoo' Grosses $260,000 in 60-House, 13-Chain Gotham Spread

Allied Artists' "Black Zoo" grossed a strong $260,000 in seven days ending yesterday (Tues.) in a 60-theatre Gotham spread. This is based on a take of close to $200,000 for the first five days of the horror pic's showing in the area, ending Sunday (19).

The 60-theatre Gotham saturation involved some 13 circuits including RKO, Skouras, Randforce and Brandt chains. The pic began screening last Wednesday (15), heading a double feature filled out by "Tell Tale Heart," made by British indie Brigadier Productions. The bill also played some 30 outlying theatres on Long Island, New Jersey and upstate New York but no figures are yet available on these showings.

Figured as helping the Gotham bookings was intensive promotional activity by Allied, involving a touring float containing a lion and tiger who play important roles in the film which travelled around town visiting the RKO, Skouras and Randforce houses. Also in town was producer Herman Cohen who participated in several other activities.

Trade Still Limping; 'West' No. 1, 'Arabia' 2d, 'Hud' 3d, 'Doctor' 4th, 'Ugly' 5th

This is the week before the Memorial Day holiday in many key cities covered by VARIETY and biz around the country shows it. Some spots have many current weeks taking in May 30 holiday but not many. Numerous exhibitors are only marking time until they can bring in big, new product later this week.

"How West Was Won" (MGM) (14th wk) continues in No. 1 spot, same as it has been for last few weeks. "Lawrence of Arabia" (Col) (20th wk) still is in second place, just as it was a week ago.

"Hud" (Par), out for first time this stanza, is copping third place on just seven playdates. It undoubtedly will be heard from additionally judging by big to sock or wow showings. "Doctor No" (UA), with a like number of engagements, is winding up fourth and looks to be heard from more in the future predicated on its showings currently. It's also on first week out.

"Ugly American" (U) (7th wk) is finishing fifth. It was third last round. "Mutiny on Bounty" (MGM) (23d wk) will take sixth money. "Birds" (U) (9th wk) is capturing seventh spot.

"To Kill a Mockingbird" (U) (22d wk) is winding up eighth. "I Could Go on Singing" (UA) is taking ninth place. "Wrong Arm of Law" (Cont) (5th wk) is finishing 10th. It was 12th last session.

Critic's Choice" (WB) (8th wk) is landing in 11th position while "The Balcony" (Cont) (6th wk) rounds out the Top 12. "Come Fly With Me" (MGM) and "David and Lisa" (Cont) are the runnerup pix.

Besides "Hud" and "Doctor No," "The Stripper" (20th) looks the most likely newcomer. It is rated great on preem engagement in Detroit. "Sparrows Can't Sing" (Janus) is also a likely new entrant, being hotsy in N .Y. and okay in Philly.

"Heavens Above" (Janus) hit a wow take opening week in N. Y "In Cool of Day" (MGM), also new, looks very spotty currently. "Paranoic" (U) shapes disappointing this round having only one okay playdate in the lot. "Yellow Canary" (20th) is even more disappointing.

"Operation Bikini" (AI) shapes good in Toronto. "Four Days of Naples" (MGM) is rated bright in L.A. "Mondo Cane" (Times) looks hotsy.

Note: The number of weeks out in release for bigger and longrun pix are designated in such cases.

Friars' Benefit Nets 40G

Hollywood, May 28.

Friars Club netted $40,000 Sunday night (19) for its charity foundation from a "Mad World" dinner at the Beverly Hilton Hotel here.

Affair, which had Milton Berle, Phil Silvers and Buddy Hackett, who costar in the Stanley Kramer film, as guests of honor, grossed $60,000 from sale of 300 tix at $100 each and 550 at $50.

RKO Pleads For Reduction; Cites Slump in Ducats

Des Moines, May 28.

Television and drive-in theatres were cited here in a petition for a cut in taxable valuation of the Orpheum Theatre. RKO Theatres, Inc. of New York, leases the theatre site and the Rawson Block, which includes seven stores in two-story buildings at 801-13 Locust St.

Abbott Simon, an RKO executive from New York, told the Board of Review that attendance has fallen about 75% since 1948 and 17% since 1958 and that a new, "emergency" exists because "many newer features are produced" and "frantic bidding goes on for the pictures." "The fact that drive-ins have started playing films on the same day and date with us has skimmed profits," he said.

The theatre and the Rawson Block have a combined taxable valuation of $173,155 and RKO is paying about $22,000 in taxes this year.

Simon and the local manager, Clarence McFarling, and district manager, Harry Weiss, cited vacancies, need for extensive remodeling and forthcoming termination of sub-leases in asking for a reduction in the Rawson Block valuation. The theatre and commercial block, they said, sustained a loss in 1962 that offset profits of the previous two years and that this year poses "another catastrophic drop." Simon has asked for a "substantial reduction" in the taxable valuation.

Disney in Discord, Ankling MPAA, Along With BV; AMPP Role Cloudy

Hollywood, May 28.

Walt Disney Productions and Buena Vista Distributing Co., while withdrawing from membership in the Motion Picture Assn. of America on June 5, still would like to remain members of the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers, Hollywood arm of Parent company, according to Disney prexy Roy O. Disney.

Whether this is possible depends upon feeling of the AMPP members, it was indicated by Eric Johnston, MPAA prexy, who stated: "As president of the Assn. of Motion Picture Producers in California, I certainly hope that the members will wish to keep the Disney organization in this association."

Disney exit from the MPAA is formalization of company's decision a year ago. Under MPAA by-laws a member's resignation is not good until a year after it is entered.

Commenting on action, Disney said: "Our withdrawal from membership in MPAA has been taken only after thorough evaluation of the various programs and activities which are carried out by MPAA in behalf of its members. Our interests often do not seem to parallel those of other member companies and many of the programs and their expenses do not concern our company and its product.

"In other ways, too, we have been forced to use our own resources in matters that have come up which we think should rightfully have been matters of interest to MPAA. Therefore, we have concluded that the expense of our membership in MPAA is no longer justified."

In voicing his hope that his company might continue its membership in the AMPP, Disney stated: "Here we have a definite mutuality of interests in the areas of management-labor negotiations as well as AMPP standards which are set for motion picture content and their marketing materials. An outstanding job has been done in these activities in my opinion."

Johnston, expressing regret of the Disney action, declared: "Every industry needs the fullest cooperation from all its elements. There is no change in our feelings. We wish the Disney organization the best of success in all that it does and I trust that this decision will one day be reversed. The Disney organization unfortunately has never been able to take full advantage of worldwide facilities and service provided by the Association for its member companies."

Mitchum, Gary Cooper and Humphrey Bogart.

Edie Adams was a hit, singing "I'm a Woman" while clad in a gown which made the song redundant. She sang Gershwin without words, using various vocal oohs and ahs.

The room and the number of folks there were too much for the piano team, Ferrante & Teicher, despite their musical gifts with such tunes as "Brazil," "African Echos" (which they composed) and "Theme From Exodus."

Also Julius Monk's witty "Struts and Frets" was in a room overpowering such an act. Their clever numbers about the Common Market and right-wing backers of Sen. Barry Goldwater couldn't be heard in such a vast hall.

Barbra Streisand had a slow arrangement in a blues tempo of "Happy Days Are Here Again," the old FDR song which might be more appropriate in a N.Y. Republican gathering these days. Excused for the night from N.Y.'s Basin Street East, she was in fine voice with "Cry Me a River," "When the Sun Comes Out" and others.

Merv Griffin, as emcee, had stiff competition with standup gags from two others on the program, President Kennedy and the Assn.'s new prez, Merriman Smith of United Press International, who bombed every line.

The Saturday night (25) program had been arranged by Smith and Henry Burroughs, Associated Press photographer, in association with Harry Kalcheim of William Morris, Stanley Adams of ASCAP, Spyros Skouras of 20th Century-Fox and execs of the American Federation of Musicians. Fred Woolston conducted the orchestra, with Paul Smith batoning for Miss Adams and Peter Daniels for Miss Streisand. Carp.

Working Touters Vs. Lounging Execs

Herman Cohen Acid Opinions on Bored Theatremen And Home Office Masters of Inaction

The creator of some 30 exploitation-type features, the latest of which is "Black Zoo," Herman Cohen has a gripe. There is a basic lack of enthusiasm among exhibitors and distributors, he feels, "they sort of defy you to prove a picture can do business."

For one thing, Cohen says, distribs are very undermanned in their ad-pub departments. He argues that it's false economy when companies concentrate their austerity drives on these departments every time they get into financial difficulties. "They should lop off some of the top executives instead who are sitting on their backsides and doing nothing," he argues. "They often let a picture die if it gets in trouble on its first opening," the producer states.

To prove the blindness of such practice, Cohen recalls the case of "Horrors of the Black Museum" which he made for American International. The pic was in trouble at first, he says, but Jim Nicholson, AIP prez, and he got together and redeveloped the pitch. It ended up grossing $3,000,000, he notes.

Good Investment

"A $200-a-week publicist can sometimes save $1,000,000," he contends. "Other industries pay great attention to new products," Cohen points out, "but in the picture business we're lucky to get a press book out. Exhibitors do nothing either to try to contribute or help. They run for the big grossers or sit and do nothing. In Europe there's great enthusiasm and production but here they're more worried than constructive."

It's all very unfortunate, he feels because "the horror picture and exploitation film have saved the industry 5,000 times. And they can be very lucrative as well. But it doesn't mean that you just do a horror picture and do business. The audience is just as choosy for these pictures as the intelligencia is for what it wants to see." The The result is that they must be carefully made and properly marketed with lotsa time and energy spent on it. "Black Zoo" cost $1,000,000 to produce and was a year in the making, he explains. "Horrors of the Black Museum" also cost $1,000,000 to make but it grossed $3,000,000.

Allied Artists is distributing "Zoo," which did well in two saturation weeks in New York the past two frames. Cohen was in Gotham for extensive promotional activities and is now on the road with two animals from the cast, a trainer and such to continue the bally. He'll hit 15 cities in all and then it'll be off to London, Rome, Paris, Munich and Berlin, sans the beasts, to see more exhibs and stir up more interest, he hopes.

There's a "practically guaranteed" audience for these pix, when done well, the producer contends. It's primarily a weekend audience ranging in age from 12-30. This age group, incidentally, makes up 72% of the film audience he says. Accordingly, Cohen, who also writes his own scripts, plays the pix with a strong teen slant, being careful not to put in anything that would offend or talk down to the teeners.

Next on his agenda, after the bally for "Zoo" is over, is "The Haunted Jungle," to be lensed in panavision and color in Hollywood. After that there'll be a 70m color epic, to be filmed in Paris and London. It amounts to a pretty horrible schedule and Cohen often manages to leer all the way to the bank.

Loss-Sale Credit On Theatre Goes To Tax Court

Akron, O., May 28.

Some $15,000 in Federal income taxes is involved in the appeal by Copley Theatre, Inc., which operates the Ascot and Starlight drive-ins, to the U. S. Tax Court in Cleveland, in connection with the sale of the old Copley Theatre at a loss 10 years ago.

The firm sold the Copley to WAKR radio and television operators to use as studios in 1953, at a claimed $74,000 loss. Edward J. Rabb currently owns the Copley Theatre Inc., but was a partner with Sydney Albert at the time of the sale. Rabb's attorney said the firm became inactive after sale of the Copley, but resumed operations in 1957, when Rabb bought out Albert's interest, and had the firm lease the two drive-in theatres from Spicer Theatre Inc., another company which Rabb owns.

Rabb's appeal is on the Internal Revenue Service's refusal to let him apply the 1953 loss against Copley Theatre Inc.'s profits on operation of the two drive-ins. The IRS disallowed the claim on grounds the company went into a different type of business and had a change of ownership. Rabb contends Copley Theatre Inc., is still in the theatre business and that he remains owner.

New York Sound Track

Reports along Broadway are that tickets for evening performances of "Cleopatra" in its initial weeks already are bringing up to $15, as opposed to the $5.50 at which they were sold at the boxoffice. Pic, of course, doesn't preem until June 12.

Add to your list of vital industry statistics: Seven Arts ad-pub veep Eddie Feldman, now in his 16th month on that job, has not called one general 7A press conference in all that time. Reason: he doesn't believe in those puff-puff blab sessions so dear to the egos in some other film companies.

Kent Cooper, now 83, former general manager of the Associated Press, was honored in his home town, Columbus, Ind., on Monday, May 20, which was proclaimed as "Kent Cooper Day."

Penelope Gilliat, film critic of the Observer of London, makes merry with the child-bride heroines of Hollywood films in the June Harper's. She refers to "The Misfits" as one of few films "grown-up enough to explore childish sexuality instead of exploiting it." The Gilliat essay is a lament for adults like Katharine Hepburn and Marlene Dietrich and a wonder-why over Carroll Baker and Sue Lyon. She writes of the heroine in "Spendor In The Grass" as having been "stylized into a convention so glib and so full of psychiatric generalities that it becomes ridiculous." There's a jeer at Doris Day in "Touch of Mink"—"the comically nubile girl too scared to get into bed." Adds the critic, "Frigidity isn't the biggest joke in the world, especially when it is a disguise for a producer's prudery."

PARAMOUNT SUMMONS MGRS. TO AREA HUDDLES

Paramount division, district and branch managers are joining domestic sales head Charles Boasberg and other execs of the home-office in a series of four product meetings, bannered "Key to the Future." First of the two-day sessions opened in Atlanta Monday (27) with the others set for New York June 4, Chicago June 10 and San Francisco June 13.

Sessions are being devoted to selling and merchandising plans for an extensive lineup of completed and forthcoming productions, with the major stress to be on the fact that Par is in its strongest product position in some time.

Among the titles are "Hud," "Nutty Professor," "Come Blow Your Horn," "Wives and Lovers," "All the Way Home," "Who's Minding the Store," "Who's Been Sleeping in My Bed," "Becket," "The Carpetbaggers," etc.

'Leopard'

that approximately 50 minutes are going to be cut from the version that is currently in release in Italy. According to Pollack, Visconti has given final authority on how the cuts are to be made to Lancaster, showing what Pollack describes as a director's "unusual" (if not unprecedented) faith in his star.

Fears No Dilution

Pollack has no fears that any of the Visconti "essence" will be left on the cutting room floor. The Italian version, he says, contains much that is of meaning only to Italians who are familiar with the history of Garibaldi's unification of Italy (the time of the story). Some such passages can be eliminated without jeopardizing the basic artistic unity of the film. And, he remids, the English version, will be assembled in Italy with Visconti's participation.

Basic problem, as it always is in such work, is fusing lipsync and meaning. According to Pollack, this problem is accentuated in "The Leopard" by the unique literary quality of the original Giuseppe di Lampedusa prose, and by some "Italianisms" which simply cannot be translated in English sentences of equal length and "shape." He feels, however, that the untrained eye and ear will be hard put to find those passages where he has sacrificed sync for meaning. He notes too that Italians seem to be supremely unconcerned about sync, even in their own original versions. While in Italy, he saw Fellini's "8½," and was struck by how often the sync was apparently forgotten entirely.

Pollack doesn't knock his present assignment, and is especially appreciative of having had the chance to work closely with both Lancaster and Visconti, but he won't be looking for any more dubbing chores. The work is tedious and the reward—at best—anonymity. He'll be returning to tv, with a feature film assignment on tap for a major studio next year.

He estimates that he has about three more weeks of work to do in New York, after which he returns to Italy to put the final print together. Film is expected to be ready to preem in New York in August.

ENTERTAINMENT STOCKS

Fundamental Value Line predictions for this coming year are: (a) The work week will shorten and (b) Disposable consumer income will rise.

This would mean (a) more leisure time, (b) more money to be spent during this leisure time, and (c) more money to be received by industries selling "leisure products"—notably THE ENTERTAINMENT INDUSTRY.

But which particular companies, which particular stocks, could benefit most?

A major upheaval is taking place among the diverse companies in this industry.

A popular leisure-time sport has fallen on hard times as player enthusiasm declined while facilities increased to, if not above, saturation. One major TV network pushed even more decisively ahead of the others. And a fast-expanding TV film-producer has just emerged as a major factor in the industry by virtue of three dramatic new steps.

Among the movie stocks, it is not only the success or failure of individual pictures that should be taken into account by investors; equally important are (a) the varying degrees to which the individual companies are dominated by expensive creative talent, (b) the trend toward "runaway" production—production of movies in foreign countries—and (c) the trend toward super-colossal "blockbuster" productions.

These and other significant operating developments are analyzed, stock by stock, in Value Line's newest Research Report on the Entertainment Stocks. Nearly half (9) of the 19 Entertainment Stocks analyzed are expected to outperform the market as a whole during the next 12 months. And, looking further ahead, we also expect 12 of these stocks to outpace the general market over the 3-to-5-year pull—with their estimated appreciation potentialities running up to double their recent prices.

We will send you Value Line's 94-page Report on the Entertainment Stocks as a special bonus under the Guest Subscription offered below. The Report includes full-page Advisory Analyses of 19 Entertainment Stocks (Movies, TV, Optical, etc.) . . . plus 56 selected stocks in 6 other industries: (Advertising & Publicity, Brewing, Container, Distilling, Personal Service, and Tobacco). Downtown-Shopping Center in Tandem

Durwood Twin, 400-Seats and 300-Seats, Will Share Common Concession Stand

Kansas City, May 28.

Opening has been set tentatively sometime during the July 15-31 fortnight for the pair of theatres being built side by side by the Durwood Theatre circuit in the Ward Parkway Shopping Center here. Construction of the shells of the theatres is well along under direction of Krohn Bros., owners of the center, and Durwood organization plans to move in about June 1 to add the decor, interior furbishings and equipment.

Policy likely will be a major release day and date with one of the downtown Durwood first runs, of which the circuit now has four. Theatres side by side is a new concept of exhibition for these parts. An attraction can play both shopping center theatres and the downtown house at the same time, but when it begins to taper off it can be taken out of one of the center theatres, later cut off at the downtown house and run out its strength at the remaining center theatre, it is explained by Stanley Durwood, president of the circuit.

Project marks the first new hardtop construction here in 23 years. The theatres tentatively are being called Parkway One and Parkway Two, but they may emerge with other handles at the late July opening planned, Durwood indicated.

Parkway One is to be a 400-seater, Parkway Two a 300-seater. Each is an entity, but one booth with two sets of equipment serves them. Each will have its own decor, but the general over-all theme will be French-Victorian, according to Hollis Jack, the decorator.

Entrance to the theatres is from the main covered promenade of the center, and this has raised some problems of marquee limitations, boxoffice, lobby, etc. Some ingenuity of design is being applied, however, to make the most of this situation, Robert Goodfriend, circuit general manager said.

The theatres include a number of innovations and adaptations, such as a single concession stand serving both theatres, as well as the general public walking the promenade. Each theatre will have a platform-stage which will lend itself to the many shopping center events, such as fashion shows, holiday programs, etc., which may utilize the theatres when not in picture operation.

When the theatres are completed, the cost is expected to be around $400,000, including construction and equipment. It is drawing major interest from multiple theatre interests in the area, for the possibilities are huge for other shopping centers, should this one click.

Everywhere the Same

Concord, N.H., May 28.

A new bill introduced in the New Hampshire Legislature here proposes that the state impose a one percent tax on net income of "all businesses, services and business operations conducted within the state."

The proposed levy would replace New Hampshire's present stock-in-trade tax, which brings in $4,800,000 in annual revenue for the state's cities and towns.

MCA Meets June 4; Disclose Agenda

Annual stockholders meeting of MCA will be held June 4 at the Sheraton-Blackstone Hotel, Chicago, at which time a board of directors will be selected and a confirmation vote will be taken on a grant to Decca-Universal prez Milton R. Rackmil by the board and the Employee Stock Option Committee of an option to purchase 15,000 shares of MCA's common stock, as well as other business.

Up for election are incumbents Jules C. Stein, director and board chairman of MCA; Lew R. Wasserman, director, prez and chief exec officer of MCA; Rackmil, director and vice chairman and Decca-U prez; Charles Miller, director and v.p.; Albert A. Garthwaite, Decca and Universal director; Walter M. Heymann and Leigh M. Battison.

According to the proxy statement, Rackmil, in addition to holding 11,713 shares of voting convertible preferred stock and 3,904 of common, also holds an option, exercisable until Feb. 6, 1968 to buy 35,000 units (each consisting of one share preferred and one-third share of common) at $31.60 per unit. This option was substituted for one previously held by him to purchase the same amount of Decca capitol stock at the same price, on the basis of the exchange offer made by MCA to Decca shareholders to swap their stock on the basis of one Decca capitol share for one preferred and one-third common of MCA.

As of Feb. 28, 1963, MCA owned approximately 87.8% of the outstanding capitol stock of Decca and Decca owned approximately 89.2% of the common stock of Universal, being 87.7% of that company's voting stock. As of April 1, 1963, Stein owned beneficially 1,367,620 shares of MCA, or approximately 30.26% and Wasserman owned beneficially 702,900 shares, or approximately 15.55% of the company's outstanding common shares. These shares represent around 27.71% and 14.24%, respectively, of the total votes of preferred and common shares of the company, excluding shares held as treasury stock or by Universal.

In remuneration, Stein received $156,000 in 1962; Wasserman, $175,000; Rackmil, $167,500; Miller, $52,000 and Taft B. Schreiber, MCA v.p. and prez of Revue Studios, $125,000. This does not include monies set aside in the company's profit-sharing fund.

In 1959 the company adopted an employee stock option plan under which options to purchase 250,000 shares of the company's common stock could be granted employees. No such options were granted until 1963 when the board and option plan committee granted Rackmil and certain execs and employees options to purchase 202,000 shares of common. Rackmil was authorized option for 15,000 at an option price of $48.57 and the directors and officers as a group were authorized 34,500 shares at the same price. Such options can be exercised in whole or in part no sooner than 12 months after the grant and no later than five years from that time and only while such person is in the employ of the company except in the case of retirement when the company may grant usage or death. Rackmil's option is being submitted at the meeting for the stockholders' approval.

Mastroianni's New B.O. Lustre in States Prompts Re-Marketing of 'Antonio'

Emergence of Italo actor Marcello Mastroianni as a lure at Stateside boxoffices has cued renewed interest on the part of Embassy Pictures in one of his earlier, less successful releases, "Bell Antonio." The distrib is considering a whole new national release schedule for the pic. This is the saga of an Italian neurotic (a rare species there) accused by his wife's family of the unspeakable Italian crime of impotence.

Aside from Mastroianni's increased lustre, Embassy was also encouraged by reaction to the pic at a recent showing in Washington, D.C., where the film had never played. It was preemed there at the DuPont recently, when it was discovered that "Antonio" hadn't gotten a Capitol screening, and registered healthy biz. On the basis of this and other indiactors, Embassy sales v.p. Carl Peppercorn figures that there could be $50,000-$60,000 still left in the film and he intends to try to get it.

The film was a loser its first time out. Peppercorn is now planning to release it nationally but avoiding the situations that played it the first go round. Object now will be to stir new interest in the film in areas that have not previously seen it and, should this be successful, it might even be reprised in some of the old locales.

Buffalo, San Francisco For Variety Conventions As Gal Unit Deferred

Houston, May 28.

Rotus Harvey was re-elected international chief barker of Variety Clubs International at the organization's annual convention in Houston last week. All other officers were also returned until the 1964 convention in Buffalo.

Serving another term are James Carreras, 1st assistant chief barker; Ralph Pries, 2d assistant chief barker; Joseph Podoloff, dough guy; and J. J. Fitzgibbons Jr., property master. A resolution to create a ladies auxiliary to the organization was deferred and San Francisco was chosen as the site for the club's 1965 conclave.

In other business, Variety barkers in London Tent 36 and New England Tent 23 were selected as co-winners of the annual Heart Awards, the first time a joint award was made in that category. As previously disclosed, Dr. Denton A. Cooley received the club's Humanitarian Award. Business forums pegged to the theme "How to Operate a Charity Successfully for a Variety Club Tent," were also held, during which time it was revealed that tents in Miami, Great Britain and New England raised almost $1,700,000 during 1962.

Convention ended last Friday (17).

5 June Blossoms From Universal

Universal will put five new features into domestic release during June, thereby giving the company one of the heaviest concentrations of releases in many years. U also currently has at least seven other pix, released within the past few months, making the rounds.

Set for its world preem and early openings late in June in "Gathering of Eagles," Rock Hudson-Rod Taylor-Barry Sullivan-Mary Peach starrer. "List of Adrian Messenger," with a roster of guestars in special disguise roles, opens in over 400 key locations across the country this week as a Theatre Owners of America Hollywood Preview Engagement film.

Ross Hunter's latest Tammy pic, "Tammy and the Doctor," with Sandra Dee doing the title bit again, preems at the Majestic, Dallas, today (Wed.), launching a series of Texas and Oklahoma openings to be followed by key situations coast to coast. "Lancelot and Guinevere," Cornel Wilde-Jean Wallace-Broan Aherne starrer, is also set for national breaks in June, as is "King Kong vs. Godbilla."

Two other pix, both suspense mellers, "Paranoiac" and "The Traitors," opened last week in the Gotham area and have been making the national rounds as well. Still in circulation of recent releases remain "The Birds," "Ugly American," "To Kill a Mockingbird" and "Freud," with "40 Pounds of Trouble" also seeing action.

Says Loew's Capitol Cannot Cease Being Theatre Sans Congress' Okay

Washington, May 28.

There perhaps have never been as many complexities involved in closing a motion picture theatre as is the case with the Loew's Capitol, Washington's biggest with 3,240 seats.

Latest development is a claim by a congressman, with the significant support of the American Law Division of the Library of Congress supporting his position, that the Loew's showplace must remain a theatre until Congress enacts a law permitting the space to become something else.

The theatre is part of the National Press Bldg. Because the building is higher than a building is allowed to be in Washington (all must be lower than the U.S. Capitol), a special act of Congress was required in the 1920s to authorize construction of the building.

The city of Washington, without home rule, must depend on Congress for all its ordinances. The act affecting the National Press Bldg. spelled out details of the building meticulously including the construction of a theatre in it.

Rep. William B. Widnall (R-N.J.), the leading Congressional supporter of keeping Loew's Capitol, clutches this old law and says the theatre cannot be removed unless Congress says so. He asked the American Law Division of the Congressional Library for an opinion on his position. He was officially informed that he was correct.

Meanwhile, in the complicated legal situation, plans continue for a June or July closing of the theatre, although there undoubtedly will be a court fight.

Ironically, neither Loew's nor the landlord (the National Press Bldg. Corp.) is involved in the fight to save the theatre. The Press Bldg. Corp. says Loew's won't pay anything like enough rent and plans to convert the space into stores and office space. Loew's, which can't make a house of that size pay anymore, has shown no real interest in keeping the biggest and most elegant film house in Washington.

Soon to be completed is Loew's new Embassy, with 587 seats. It is being constructed between two new posh office buildings about a block from the site of Washington's huge new Hilton Hotel. Loew's also has the Palace Theatre here, with 2,360 seats.

Several other members of Congress have joined with Widnall in a vocal drive to save Loew's Capitol as a theatre. A large group of local culture buffs are backing the maneuver to the hilt, and all such proponents are trying to get the State Department behind the effort, too.

They point out that without Loew's Capitol, there is no place for the great ballet companies, like the Bolshoi and others, or major opera companies, like the Metropolitan, to perform in Washington. Such big events have always been held at Loew's Capitol, with its enormous stage and big seating capacity.

They want the Capitol to remain open at least until the proposed $35,000,000 National Cultural Center is completed. No one at this time has the vaguest notion when enough money can be raised to start the Cultural Center. There probably isn't more than $1,000,000 in the kitty, if that, as of now.

If Not TV, It's Fire

Boonville, N.Y., May 28.

Another upstate smalltown motion picture theatre landmark was removed from the map, when fire, fanned by wind, destroyed the block in which The Franjo was located. Built by the late Joseph Sternberg, Franjo had been operated in recent years by Kallet Theatres of Oneida. Far as known present plans do not call for rebuilding.

Last winter, fire gutted a building which included the Strand Theatre in Dolgeville. That one, too, was not replaced.

$25 Fine as Step To Maryland Test

Baltimore, May 28.

Ronald Freedman, operator of the Rex Theatre, who admits he deliberately exhibited a film at his theatre without first submitting it to state censor board in hopes of instituting case testing validity of the board, was fined $25 and costs by Judge Anselm Sodaro of Criminal Court.

Judge Sodaro upheld validity of censorship law and referred to test case as "broadside attack." Judgment, Freedman said later, was what he expected, and wanted, since he was hoping to take the case to the Maryland Court of Appeals where it is now headed.

Judge Sodaro okayed release of Freedman on his own recognizance pending outcome of appeal. Judge pointed out that test attack on law contended that it did not define and establish definite standards of conduct.

Case contended that censorship law was illegal because it interfered with free flow of interstate commerce, violated due process and impaired rights of free speech and free press under the Constitution.

In three-page opinion, Judge wrote "After consideration of argument of counsel and briefs which were filed by both sides, I have concluded that Article 66A and in particular Section 2 thereof which is the basis of the charge, is valid and constitutional.

"Although this challenged section imposes a previous restraint, the gambit of constitutional protection does not include complete and absolute freedom to exhibit any and every kind of motion picture. This challenged provision-requiring the submission of films prior to their public exhibition is not, on the grounds set forth by the defendant, void on its face."

Freedman, who has long been battling with the Board, initiated case when he displayed film called "Revenge at Daybreak" advising Board that film had no seal and that he was showing it without it.

Lines Up Amateurs To Help Mark 50th Anni Of Edmonton House

Edmonton, Atla., May 23.

Vaude returned on Sunday to the Strand theatre when Manager Rolphe Reinhardt presented 16 variety acts, an old film and new "Spencer's Mountain," Henry Fonda and Maureen O'Hara starrer, to mark the 50th anniversary of the spot.

House opened as a Pantages theatre May 12, 1913, closed in 1929 and reopened in 1931 as an 800-seat situation.

Reinhardt worked for months to get 80 local amateurs and semi-pros ready for the presentation, an invitation affair for oldtimers, pioneers and members of friendship clubs.

Spring, Summer: Zing's the Thing At AB-PT Via Hinterland Beefups

Following a very poor first quarter due to severe weather conditions throughout most of the country this winter, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres is out to show a dramatic increase via a big fourth quarter drive. Accordingly, AB-PT v.p. Edward L. Hyman has been out on the road visiting affiliate exhibs and pushing for the campaign.

It is Hyman's feeling that the grassroots exhib is the man who makes the difference and that he can do a better job than any home-office group. He has been out beating the bushes and says that things are looking up for exhibs this summer and on into the fall. He notes that competition for playtime is more active this summer than in a long while and he also feels that there is an increase in quality product available in a more consistant pattern.

As far as AB-PT itself, Hyman feels that things will pick up strongly in the quarter. The company has $2,500,000 invested in "Cleopatra" bookings and the exec feels that these will do well. For one thing, he points out, "Cleo" has been booked into theatres that need the biz. In most cases, the pic hasn't been booked into situations that are in consistantly good shape and where a good pic supply exists. He notes that the pic is booked for 30 weeks in most of these situations and he feels that the circuit will probably get it back by then.

Also as part of the fourth quarter drive, Hyman has lined up a series of meetings with distrib chiefs which are in progress this week. These are for the purpose of getting distrib cooperation with the drive and luncheons in August with same bosses will follow up this week's introductory sessions. Part of the time will be taken up in organizing Hyman's latest publication which will include listings on releases from October through next Easter and beyond.

SILVER SPRINGS' 75TH ANNI VIA AB-PT AID

Silver Springs, Fla., May 21.

Florida State Theatres, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres local affil and operator for the broadcasting-theatre web of Silver Springs, is planning a year-long celebration at the spa to honor the attraction's 75th Anni.

AB-PT took over the sprawling complex last fall and has made few changes in its operation or facilities. Refurbishing of the plant and additional development of its layout are being mapped, however, some of them to tie in with the year-long celebration, which will focus continued attention on its already-successful operation.

France's Film Woes In Paper Just Released; Sensible, No Sensation

Paris, May 28.

Committee of French Film Study and Action, created last February during the height of the French film crisis and the threatened production stoppage, has released its report on film problems and steps to be taken to alleviate them. Committee was set up by the industry but grouped governmental as well as film people on its board.

Study will be presented to the governmental Ministry of Culture as well as to the ensemble of the film industry. If paper gives nothing that has not been bandied about often, it still clarifies film troubles and steps to be taken about it. It is also a useful reference document on the general film picture in France today.

A brief introduction sums up all the problems that have kept the French film in an almost constant state of crisis since the war. Noted is that if film is an industry based on distributing canned copies of prototypes it is still an art and vulnerable to the vicissitudes of public tastes and changes in outlooks and economics.

It is pointed out that the film industry is still geared to the old days when people went to films almost automatically instead of selectively as they do now. Growing affiluence has also hit filmgoing as money is subverted for household appliances, cars vacations etc.

With falling filmgoing and unpredictable foreign markets, the report calls on production to try to find a way of producing films at less cost and with new public tastes in mind as well as finding a way of working out a modus vivendi with the nationalized tv so as to balance fiscal problems by bigger vidfilm production by film people.

Distribution should be clarified in regards to production and exhibition and a definite detaxation has been asked for Film Aid hike to 14% on grosses towards next pix, over the past 5.5%, which runs through June '64, was felt helpful but dangerous too in perhaps bringing on too many locally slanted pix to capitalize on the aid rather than their appeal.

A great part is given to tv with points that more French films should be shown but not at prime times, no downbeat tv critical programs on films, leaving that to newspapers, and a general ceding of needed vidfilm series to regular producers rather than making them within the tv organization itself.

Its authors hope this report will focus national and industry attention on film problems to try to relieve them as much as possible. Less risks by distribs, so as not to affect exhibs and bank loans, are also blocked out, a tightening up of the industry aspects to cope with present times, and detaxation and tv-film coordination again emerge as the main factors.

Common Market considerations are not mentioned but a concerted move to try to regain lost or falling foreign markets are also urged.

Elsa Lanchester returns to screen for first time since death of husband Charles Laughton in Peter Lorre's AIP feature "It's Alive."

SEE COLONIAL, ALBANY RAZED FOR PARKING

Albany, May 28.

A local landmark would disappear if the Common Council passed (as expected) an ordinance introduced last week to purchase the Colonial Theatre and an adjacent building for $68,000, as the site of a municipal parking lot on Central Avenue near Quail Street.

The Colonial, built in 1911, is the city's second oldest theatre. The Leland, on South Pearl Street in the downtown business section, is the most venerable, but it would be part of a site for a 6,000-seat convention hall on the edge of the State's "South Mall" project, according to tentative plans.

The State will erect on 98.5 acres of taken-over land and property, a series of buildings, to be financed by city bonds outside the constitutional debt limit and to be State-rented for 40 years — making Albany, in Governor Rockefeller's words, "the most beautiful capital city in the nation."

The Colonial, on Albany's chief uptown business district, played a variety of policies, including motion pictures (pioneering here in exhibition of foreign films) and legitimate.

Colonial has been closed in recent years.

H'wood-Smog

staff and partly obsolete gear. It is also remarked here that the 75 acres of the new annex is larger than the present Columbia lot.

There has been a strong echo locally to Coast theory that the new plant meets the industry problems headon and its creation would "save Hollywood by moving it beyond the congested areas of Los Angeles and out of studios mostly built when sound first came in." The Malibu tract, bought some 18 years ago by 20th-Fox, is not only extensive but has a wide variety of terrain, including a mountain, a natural lake, a man-made lake which has controlled tides for filmic purposes.

Banker interests are aware that standing sets are economically practical only if the ground is not too valuable. It is generally stated in the east that there is hardly a standing set on the coast which can remain standing much longer. This factor is of vital significance to the whole campaign to keep U.S. production in California. Destruction of the costly "Cleopatra" sets on the Titanus lot in Rome, and the earlier ones in London deny residual rentals via use for later productions. And so on.

Good For Crews?

The Malibu super-studio, when and as built and operated, is foreseen as stabilizing craft employment. Indeed the argument is now heard here that next to the l'ow to overhead as a boon to the producing companies the technicians may be the great beneficiaries. "Economy of production in a studio with every modern device is the key to keeping the film business in California and giving something like regular employment."

On the architectural aspects, involving presentday inovations in soundproofing, light mobility on sets it is certain that the Malibu project will take plenty of hints from the three most modern studios in existence, one each in Italy, England and Ireland.

Los Angeles sensitivity to the issue of "smog" seems to have played down that factor, but New York showmen speak of it as a major asset for the Malibu development. "Smog" has been a real problem in outdoor shooting in the old studio backlots for 15 years, it is said here.

The word here is that the final decision on the purchase of the additional acreage with its insurance on the ingressegress problem was made two weeks ago when the three company presidents, Abe Schneider of Columbia, Robert O'Brien of Metro and Darryl F. Zanuck of Fox met in London.

Great secrecy was apparently maintained in the negotiations with the cattlemen. It is not known here who handled the deal in California. It is assumed that an operating company has been or will be formed in which Columbia, Metro and Fox will hold the shares.

to Luchino Visconti's "The Leopard" (20th) starring Burt Lancaster was cheered as was Visconti who was present.

Then two Special Jury Awards, not split, were given; the first to Japan for Mazaki Kobayhashi's brilliant, tragic drama "Hara-Kiri," and second to the witty and inventive Czech fantasy "One Day . . . A Cat."

These decisions were endorsed by the crowd. Ditto the male thesping award to Richard Harris as the dynamic, loutish but moving character in the British pic "This Sporting Life" (Rank).

First prize to draw dispute was for French actress Marina Vlady in the Italo comedy "The Queen Bee." Boos mixed with sympathetic applause—after all it was the jury's fault not her's—greeted her as she went on stage for her laurel. Expectation centered on Bette Davis as "Best Actress." French majority and one Italo member favored Vlady while three foreigners held for Miss Davis and the Russo rep for a Polish actress, and this award gave France a part of a prize via Miss Vlady and also helped get rid of an unusual pic in "Bee" which also merited something on its expert satiric comedics. Some felt a special comedy prize would be again created for it as was done for "Divorce, Italian Style" last year.

Not to entirely pass over Hollywood the Gary Cooper Prize was diverted to U's "To Kill A Mockingbird." In '61 it was given to another pic dealing with some aspects of the Negro problem in the U.S., "Raisin in the Sun" (Col). For Russia a prize was pulled out of left (natch) field and called "The Prize For the Best Evocation of a Revolutionary Epic" and it went to the only Russo entry "The Optimistic Tragedy."

Film was felt old fashioned and more propaganda than a true lyric offering.

Final prize went to the Rumanian-French co-production "Codine" directed by a Frenchman, Henri Colpi. This was also felt a nod to the French even if none of the French entries got anything. It was for the best scenario and it was pointed out it was adapted from a classic which made this award somewhat difficult to accept. Jury tried to amend it to best adaptation.

Official short subject prizes had the Golden Palm split between the Swiss "Water" of Alex J. Seiler, a study of running waters, and the French "L'Haricot" (The Bean), of Edmond Sechan, a sentimental tale of an old lady's cultivation of a bean plant to give a futherance of life. Special jury prize went to Yugoslavia for "My Apartment," about a little girl's new home, with special mentions for Italy's "Sunday" and Hungary's "You."

"The Birds" (U) opened the Festival out of competition with Alfred Hitchcock and Tippi Hedren on the spot. Audience reception was tepid and reviews mixed. Its bravura moments of suspense and terror got the nod if the over-all did not. Admittedly there was festival sense in this booking.

Italy fared well. The monumental beauty of the official entry "The Leopard" (20th), the bright, mordant comedics of "The Queen Bee," the poetic texture and direction of "The Fiancees" and the offbeat appeal of Federico Fellini's "8½" all attested to the fact that Italy rated having four in the running.

No need to reprise the internal bickerings of the French film industry itself. These have been detailed in the last three issues of VARIETY.

So Cannes 1963 was not the success it was last year. Yet it presented a panorama of world production, if the best were not always sent. Plenty of stars appeared. A lot of business was transacted, especially by Joe Levine's Embassy Pictures, while Walter Reade Jr. pondered offers for his "The Balcony" and "David and Lisa" and saw the Anglo pic he has for the U.S. "This Sporting Life" emerge as one of the best pix at the fest. Coproduction deals were "announced," contracts were either signed or promised, and side events like the Critic's Section unveiled an unusual Yank comic indie "Hallelujah the Hills," of Adolfas Mekas, which drew sales approaches as well as invites to two other festivals, Venice and Locarno.

Robert Favre Le Bret, the festival president, agrees to the importance of the right to turn down films but points out that it is a governmental decision, not his. He can only suggest.

Le Bret also scores the Federation of International Film Producer Associations clamor for a 12-day maximum. He wants to know how he can comply with their rules, of accepting all films chosen by rightful selection committees, and still keep the fest at 12 days?

He is also worried about the Federation wanting to impose the right to submit a list to the fest next year from which the "invited" films would be chosen after staking out the official film. Le Bret avers that official selections are often good but many times a worthy film may not get on an invite list. He still feels it is necessary to have initiative with Cannes itself.

JUNKET TO WYOMING

WB Travels Press To 'Spencers' Country

Warners has a junket going to Jackson, Wyoming, and the press-radio-television junketeers are 250 strong. Film company and local civic groups, plus Sen. Gale McGee and Gov. Clifford Hansen, are taking the promotion-outlet reps in tow for a four-day outing beginning tomorrow (Thurs.), all tieing in with the dedication of Spencer's Mountain in Grand Teton National Park. WB's concern is its picture of the "Spencer's Mountain" title. Writer-producer-director Delmer Daves and performers Henry Fonda, Maureen O'Hara, James MacArthur and Mimsy Farmer, all of the picture, are slated to participate in the long weekend.

Hosts include WB, the Jackson Chamber of Commerce, State of Wyoming Travel Commission and the Grand Teton Lodge Company.

Further Figuring Re Toll Tests In Gt. Britain

London, May 28.

It looks an odds-on bet that whoever gets the okay from the Postmaster General to take part in the upcoming tollvision tests is going to get a front seat facing the engine on the gravy train.

For Reginald Bevins, the minister in question, is strongly tipped to have made up his mind that the tests will not constitute a sealed off entity of their own. After a suitable period of running—they're not expected to kickoff now before late spring of 1964—the PMG will survey the scene and make up his mind.

If satisfied that the system works and is filling a need, he will then set about forming and having ratified by parliament the necessary legislation. Through all this the "tests" would continue to run and the franchise holders would simply go on only after establishment that they would be free to extend their scope and coverage.

There appears to be little opposition to this state of affairs, particularly from the producers, both organized bodies having recently had talks with senior officers of the post office on payvee test arrangements. Feeling is pretty general that anyone who dips into his pocketbook to gamble on the success of any kind of payvee test deserves the first chance at a share of the kudos accruing from success.

But reps of the Federation of British Film Makers at their meeting with the GPO man didn't lose the chance of warning again of their feelings that a limited payvee experiment would not only make it difficult to gauge the general demand for subscription tv, but would also make it impossible for producers of payvee programs to plan on a scale suitable for the ultimately larger audience of a permanent system. Hand in hand with this the FBFM's reps drove home a plea backing British Telemeter Home Viewing's protests at not being allowed to run the test on the three-program system it has at its disposal.

This point was made, apparently, more out of hope and conscience than expectation for it is now held to be highly unlikely that the PMG will back down on his payvee test conditions.

The List of Adrian Messenger

Kirk Douglas has the major assignment and carries it off colorfully and credibly. The others are Tony Curtis, Burt Lancaster, Robert Mitchum and Frank Sinatra. Only Mitchum is easily recognizable beneath the facial stickum.

Huston has directed the film with style and flair, and has benefitted enormously from Joe MacDonald's agile and artistic lens employment. Valuable contributions have also been made by Editor Terry O. Morse, the art directing battery of Alexander Golitzen, Stephen Grimes and George Webb, European pohtographer Ted Scaife, and composer Jerry Goldsmith, whose eerie musical theme is provocative and haunting and could become an immensely popular item in the record market. Last, but not least, credit is due makeupman Bud Westmore for his concealment of several of the most familiar faces of the twentieth century. Tube.

The atmosphere of mystery and secrecy was maintained in Cannes, in striking contrast to the brazen publicity in support of other projects. The invites, duplicated on cheap paper, did not even name the film.

TOLL STAKE BEFORE SCREEN ACTORS GUILD

Hollywood, May 28.

Nearly two-months long negotiations between Assn. of Motion Picture Producers and the Screen Actors Guild will be discussed at a special membership meeting to be held June 9 at the Hollywood Palladium by SAG. Talks for a new pact began March 25.

Negotiations have been prolonged by the absence of various negotiators because of business out of town, and illness by one principal.

Key point of SAG's demands is a formula for pay tv, guild seeking to establish the principle for feevee payments, althought, of course, there is none now except on an experimental basis.

Nat'l Genl. Demo Of Tollvision

Los Angeles, May 21.

National General Corp. will spend "in excess of $100,000" on its demonstration program for Theatre-Vision, closed-circuit project to be televised in theatres throughout the country, but company isn't limiting the cost, according to Irving H. Levin, newly-appointed prexy of subsidiary. He added that he's told Gower Champion, who has joined firm as program director and advisor, "to spend as much as is necessary."

Demonstration program, to be held July 1 at Fox West Coast's Village Theatre here, has already been prepared, Champion reported. Ralph Bellamy has been set as host, his portion to emanate from a N.Y. legit theatre and beamed to the Village. Other personalities set for initial program, to run under 30 minutes, include Paul Lynde, doing a scene from legit version of "Bye Bye Birdie"; Isaac Stern, appearing from Carnegie Hall, and Pierre Olaf, performing a dance from "Carnival." Lynde and Olaf recreate their original Broadway performances in the shows, both of which Champion originally directed.

Additionally, Champion will set a section from the Hollywood Bowl to rep pop concert medium, a portion devoted to medical field to rep educational use of the medium, films of the Olympics and a bullfight from Spain. Frank and Tom Waldman are writing the demo program.

Selections for demo program are being made to point out the varied use of the medium. Champion particularly noted the educational aspect of Theatre-Vision, wherein it can be used for theatre screenings of political conventions, medical conferences including a heart operation and other areas of social-educational significance. Material can be taped anywhere and beamed, via telephone lines, from on-the-spot areas to all theatres leasing the system. While there are no firm continuing deals for facilities until after the test demonstration, NBC has been set to handle all technical facilities for beaming of this initial event. When system begins fullscale operation, in Spring of '64, programming is planned on an eight performances-a-week basis.

Champion said, for future beamings, they are now talking to "Folies Bergere," to be beamed from Paris; Jascha Heifetz and Vladimir Horowitz. Director also said they "are close to a longterm deal with Stern and Carnegie Hall." Stern is prexy of Carnegie Hall Assn.

Champion, in addition to a five-year deal as advisor of the system, will also produce and direct shows when it goes into operation. Material he plans is restaging of hit Broadway shows, original created projects and one-man shows. Director points to cost factor that will make system more useable, particularly for filmed Broadway material.

For instance, "Bye Bye Birdie" cost $6,000,000 to film. Champion said show could be made for Theatre-Vision by remounting from stage version and refilming either in a studio or on the original legit stage where it appeared for "less than $500,000."

Show, which he directed, originally cost $240,000 to stage on Broadway. He would add additional $250,000 for added rehearsals and restaging for a "tv-spectacular kind of presentation for Theatre-Vision."

Nine-Theatre Net Behind Telemeter In Canada; Sports Big Emphasis

New wrinkle in tollvision came to the fore with the formation of a nine-theatre network in Canada which will present sports (and subsequently other) shows simultaneously with at-home presentations to subscribers of the Paramount-owned International Telemeter system. Telemeter is the hub of the operation and thus is taking for itself a headstart over Theatre-Vision Color Corp., representing a tieup between National General and General Electric, which some time in the future looks to form its own closed-circuit theatre net.

The Telemeter plan is to start in the fall with 35 away-from-home games played by the Toronto Maple Leafs, all to be picked up by nine theatres in addition to the Telemeter homes. Total theatre capacity is 11,000, and tickets are scaled from $1.25 to $3. The hockey games were beamed into the College Theatre, Toronto, along with the homes last year and this was successful; it also was taken to mean that theatres and the homes can be operated side by side and mutually beneficial.

R. W. Bolstad, new president of Famous Players Canadian, the Canadian theatre chain which holds the Telemeter franchise, said he envisions a theatre network of 100 situations which could accept the piped-in tv programming in conjunction with homes.

It can be a boon to theatres (the College moved from red to black ink operations via the Telemeter ice contests). And with the added revenue from theatres, a system such as Telemeter can be provided with capital for in-home expansion. It also fills programming gaps for theatres faced with a theatrical film shortage.

Par president Barney Balaban termed establishement of the pay-tv-theatre network in Canada as "one of the most important developments in the history of pay television. One of the major problems in expanding pay-tv in the home has been the excessive cost of special and sports programming in the early stages. As theatres make their houses available this problem is solved. The arrangement also emphasizes the compatability of theatre exhibition and pay television."

Eidophor projectors, one of which already is installed in the College Theatre, have been ordered for the other eight houses from Theatre Network Television, headed by Nathan L. Halpern.

Immediately-formed web of Canadian theatres comprises the College plus the Beach, Parkdale, Century, St. Clair and Glendale, all in Toronto, and the Strand in Hamilton, the Regent in Oshawa and the Capitol in St. Catherine's.

If Texas Microwave Works Okay, Rate Rises

Palestine, Tex., May 28.

Texas Video Inc. has been granted permission by the city council to increase its television cable service rates $1 per month. It is effective within 30 days after the firm puts microwave service into operation here, if, in the opinion of the council the company is providing subscribers with an acceptable video by that time.

The increase will raise the television cable service charges to $5 per month.

Under the rate increase authorized by the council the company will be required to provide microwave service over four channels—4, 5, 8 and 11.

Norman Williams, manager of the cable system here, said installation of new equipment to provide microwave service will begin in about four months.

Negro intellectuals led by novelist-playwright James Baldwin. Kennedy apparently had hoped for "practical" suggestions but got passionate speeches and sarcastic cracks instead, including the proposal that his brother ought personally to face the faculty and student body of the U. of Alabama.

No single incident can be pointed to as creating the existing tensions. Widespread dread of possible open clashes in public places this summer is simply gruesome retrospection at work. However the publication in the New Yorker magazine of Baldwin's "The Fire Next Time," a savagely bitter upbraiding of white "hypocrisy" about civil liberties is now recognized as a kind of breakthrough to the educated classes. It thoroughly frightened much of the white community which has been complacently devoted to token gestures.

This, of course, is not the first time that the amusement industry has found itself up to its boxoffices in politically sensitive situations.

boxoffice be the judge," the author argues.

After 27 years as a writer, Spillane says of himself, "I consider myself a manufacturer who puts out a successful product." He puts down talk of art as being the only format for a writer and recalls that his books have consistantly sold enough to put them well up on the bestseller lists but that the powers that be haven't seen fit to acknowledge same. Once, he remembers, he decided to make an issue of it and, with the aid of columnists Hy Gardner and Earl Wilson, he pressured recognition of the sales.

When it comes to a script, Spillane feels that the same commercial rules apply. He opines that "enough people don't think in terms of audience satisfaction. That's the important thing after all—to entertain an audience." As far as the material itself is concerned, and considering his reputation as a spicy writer, Spillane says of the rough stuff and sex, "if it belong there then put it there. Too many producers overload a picture with the stuff."

He has run into censorship situations with his books, he says, but notes that it always worked for better sales. In one case, he recalls, the Legion of Decency downrated a book and it sold another 1,000,000 copies. A dedicated opponent to censorship, nonetheless, Spillane says "the motion picture industry lets itself be censored because it's full of freightened producers."

Spillane has become increasingly interested in the picture biz and plans spending more time writing for it. As far as being an actor is concerned, he says the work's too tedius for his liking. "Girl Hunter" was produced for $350,000-$400,000 with deferrals of the principals' salaries.

Theatremen Seek Teachvee Allies In Their War on Connecticut Toll

By ROBERT ECHELSON

Hartford, May 28.

Statewide film industry which has been fighting tollvision in Connecticut has turned to teachvee to aid in their battle. Effective Wednesday (29) for a two weeks period, ten area hardtops and drive ins are to exhibit a short film describing the programming that appears on Connecticut's only educational tv outlet, WEDH. Latter is currently down for the count of nine (due to lack of financial support) and is awaiting funds from the General Assembly for its further temporary existence.

In an earlier Hartford story it was pointed out that ETV was putting a dent into activities of Hartford test toll tv station, WHCT, because of the type of its nighttime programming. Although not admitting it, theatre ops feel that by promoting ETV they can stall/kill future of feevee.

Both types of tvcasting are operating sans commercials. Former is offering shows that are cultural, informational and entertainment. Latter is mainly on a movie kick.

However, both are dealing with an aud that both resents and resists commercials. It is in this area that teachvee could harm the future of paysee. It is on this thesis that the movie ops are promoting educational television. During the day, etv skeds in school programming. Nights, it acts as an alternate television fare for adult viewers. In the same prime hours as WHCT (paysee station sponsored by RKO General) it programs concerts, film, legit, documentaries and jazz.

For the summer months, WHCT is suspending its decoder charges on the theory that most subscribers will be away from home on vacation. In addition, station has announced policy of decoder non payment if patron is away from home for two weeks or more during the year.

The short two and a half minute film to be screened in the 10 theatres describes the programming of WEDH and points out that it is a community project. Ken Allen, tv personality and former WTIC staffman, is spokesman on the film which was underwritten by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut, who also arranged for its distribution. Showings are scheduled at the following theatres: Allyn Theatre, Hartford; Cine Webb Theatre, Wethersfield; Central Theatre, West Hartford; Burnside Theatre, East Hartford; E. M. Loew's Theatre, Hartford; Loew-Poll, Hartford; Meadows Drive In, Hartford; Manchester Drive In, Manchester; Pike Drive In, Berlin; and Plainville Drive In, Plainville.

'Collins Plan' On Ratings Runs Into a Pandora's Box of Bugs

Washington, May 28.

The Oren Harris Investigating Subcommittee folded its expose of ratings abuses by giving NAB prez LeRoy Collins the "go" sign to try to make NAB's new voluntary plan on ratings work.

But despite Collins' optimistic forecasts, it was evident to subcommittee members and industry reps on the D.C. scene that he faces stiff odds and a real test of his leadership and prestige in trying to make the industry buy the plan.

Collins admitted that he is having trouble with NBC, CBS and ABC. Both David Adams of NBC and Thomas K. Fisher of CBS have expressed "grave doubts" that the plan as a whole is workable, and ABC Radio prexy Robert Pauley sent the Harris Subcommittee outlining several objections.

He further admitted a Pandora's box of bugs. The whole thing dances in a twilight zone of anti-trust restrictions. And the key to its workability is whether one American business (broadcasting) can get away with laying down regulations another American business (ratings services) must follow, with, of course, still another American business (advertisers) intertwined both ways.

Yet, Chairman Harris (D-Ark.) recessed the ratings hearings indefinitely to give NAB the opportunity to test its plan. As that happened, various subcommittee members told Collis they will be closely watching what happens in the industry regulation effort. Republicans and Democrats alike warned that they will support legislation to place ratings under federal regulation if the NAB plan falters.

3-Pronged Plan

The NAB plan is divided into three parts:

(1) Appointment of a Rating Council to establish minimum criteria and standards for valid and reliable audience measurements and to accredit those rating service which meet the established standards. (Rep. Gillis Long (D.-La.), one subcommittee member, complained that "minimum" standards always have the disturbing habit of automatically becoming "maximum" standards, and he advised NAB to keep this in mind while setting them.)

(2) This council will create a Rating Audit Service under professional management to make periodic audits of rating services to determine their performance. (The Harris Subcommittee suggested that such audits should be made without advance notice to the services if they were to be worth very much. Some subcommittee members also though a respected outside research service

For the "Beverly Hillbillies," the television set is apparently turned off in the room at the top.

NAB prez LeRoy Collins was testifying before the Oren Harris Investigating Subcommittee on tv ratings when the subcommittee counsel Robert Richardson asked:

"Do you watch the 'Beverly Hillbillies'?"

Said Collins: "I did—once."

NBC-TV Revamps Its Daytime Sked; Return of Griffin

Merv Griffin may be back on NBC-TV daytime schedule by next fall with his own audience participation program. The singer-emcee, whose daytime variety stanza was cancelled by NBC a few months ago, is considered a promising prospect to replace the 11 a.m. "Price Is Right" strip.

There is a double amount of pleasure in store for Griffin, since "Ben Jerrod," one of the two half-hour "medical" soap operas replacing his afternoon variety program, is on the verge of being retired to wherever old doctors go from television.

"Jerrod" will definitely leave NBC-TV by the end of June, at the end of its first cycle at 2 p.m., and be replaced by the Bob Quigley-Merrill Heatter package called "People Will Talk." "Talk," made originally for CBS with Arthur Godfrey, now probably will be done on NBC with Dennis James.

For the next 13 weeks, in any event, "Jerrod's" present running mate, "The Doctors," is safe.

Hanging by a thread as to renewal is a third NBC program—Goodson-Todman's "Play Your Hunch." Long ago marked for the heap, then revived, then marked again, "Hunch" is now again up for tight negotiation. Latest word is that the dickers are going badly. If they take a turn for the better, it is said, the likeliest prospect for the program is a new NBC time slot.

NBC May Diversify Into Book Publishing; Seek Going Concern

NBC is looking to get into book publishing as a sideline.

The broadcasting company, through its subsidiary NBC Enterprises, has been looking around the book publishing market the last several days in an effort to acquire a going concern. It's understood that Enterprises chieftain George Graham and his cohorts, in the goal of print diversification, are looking mainly at the specialized book field.

Idea is get a company that specializes in text books or cook books, for example.

A similar intent manifested itself a few years back, but NBC Enterprises, for reasons of its own, finally stopped actively looking for a book publishing house to make part of the web setup.

90-Min. Sullivan Show For 15th Anni Hoopla

"Ed Sullivan Show," marking the start of its 16th year, will be extended to 90 minutes for its June 23 telecast on CBS-TV.

Alternating sponsors Pillsbury and P. Lorillard are being given first crack in picking up the extra 30 minute tab.

Bill Shadel Quits ABC

Bill Shadel, ABC news correspondent in Washington, has resigned from the web to return to teaching.

He's been named a professor of communications at Washington University.

There's Still Some Coin Kicking Around in TV For Current Schedule

Sales on CBS-TV current season were inked by the web, deals covering both daytime and nighttime programming.

Chesbrough-Ponds' bought alternate week quarter hours in "Love of Life," "Password," "House Party," "To Tell the Truth," and "Edge of Night." Studebaker inked for participation in NCAA football games starting in September; National Cotton Council bought into web's morning minute plan.

Star-Kist Foods inked for participation in "Alfred Hitchcock," "Nurses," "Keefe Brasselle Show," "Twilight Zone," "Mr. Ed," "Fair Exchange" and "Dobie Gillis." Drackett signed for participation in the "Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz Comedy Hour," summer replacement for Jackie Gleason.

Lehn & Fink Corp. inked for participation in "CBS Reports," "Twilight Zone," "Hitchcock," "Reckoning," "Have Gun Will Travel," "Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz Comedy Hour" and the "Brasselle" show.

3-Network Spec On World's Fair; Headaches Posed

A two-hour telespec on all three major networks, probably the biggest show in the history of commercial tv, is being blueprinted for the eve of April 21 of next year, the night before the opening of the New York World's Fair at Flushing Meadows, N.Y. It'll be a preview of many of the attractions in the exhibit with top figures in the political, show biz and industrial orbits participating.

However, tremendous problems are still to be ironed out before a show of this magnitude can take place. In the first place the planners, who will include Martin Stone, on leave from the Herald Tribue broadcasting interests, currently heading the Fair's industrial section, along with Fair prexy Robert Moses, are hopeful of lining up a sponsor from the ranks of those exhibiting. If none picks up the tab, then they'll go to the outside.

This problem of sponsorship promises to be a kingsized headache. For example, both Ford and General Motors are major exhibitors in the industrial section. Should either one participate in the sponsorship, would the sponsor be incumbent to dwell on the exhibit of its major competitor? This is only one of the facets arising from a project of this magnitude. Should both go in on the bankrolling, it would be a major television milestone and an unprecedented feat by Madison Avenue and the networks.

Should the show planners have to go to the outside, then it'll be incumbent upon them to protect the interests of its exhibitors.

The networks have already agreed to the show in principal, and it's up to the Fair officials with Stone fronting to sell the show and eliminate the headaches that go along with that facet of the event.

'Hedda' Rides Dec. 9

CBS-TV has chosen its popular Monday night for its slotting of "Hedda Gabbler," the 90-minute Ingrid Bergman starrer which to date has failed to pick up a sponsor.

Telecast date is Dec. 9 at 9:30 p.m., offering Danny Thomas as a lead-in, with Andy Griffith and "East Side West Side" being preempted. Web, which has a heavy unrealized investment in the production, hopes the slotting will attract ad coin. Understanding is that some sponsor interest has been rekindled.

CBS-TV's telecasting rights expire Dec. 31.

We Hear You Loud & Clear

TV Guide's article on "The Sponsor Was the Last to Know" in the current June 1 issue:

". . . The first the advertising director of Armstrong [Max Banzhaf] knew about his show's demise was the day he read the story in VARIETY. The story said simply without attribution that the Armstrong show was to be 'axed' in the interest of making room for the Danny Kaye Show . . .

"Understandably more than mildly interested, Banzhaf immediately called CBS for confirmation of the story. He was informed after being passed from vice president to vice president that it would not be forthcoming until the network's president, James Aubrey, returned from Europe. After several weeks Aubrey returned and did inform Banzhaf that Circle Theatre was through.

"'. . . Nothing, [said Banzhaf] seems to go through the ordinary channels in the television business—I may be reading how we stand any one of these days—in VARIETY.'

"To Banzhaf, learning of the demise of Armstrong Circle Theatre in the trade press, is a point that apparently rankles, and understandably so."

'CBS Reports': Retread Jobs

Key Issues Get Some Followup Attention in Bid To Update Viewers

Fred Friendly's pubaffairs unit, "CBS Reports," when it finds a good documentary story, returns time and again to the same story, when a new treatment is warranted.

Here is compilation of recent examples: Producer David Lowe, who did "Harvest of Shame" in 1960, has just returned to Florida where he's again looking into the plight of migrant workers. Tonight (Wed.), "CBS Reports" will update its '62 subject, "Birth Control and the Law." When the U.S. Surgeon General issues his report on the cigaret-cancer controversy, "CBS Reports," which did "The Teenage Smoker," will do a documentary on the Surgeon General's report and recommendations, if any.

Also there was "The Silent Spring of Rachel Carson," telecast April 3, followed through with new material on the May 15 telecast, timed after President Kennedy's science advisory committee made its report on the use of pesticides. Repeat telecast of "Biography of a Bookie Joint" had some new material, telling about the convictions of subjects named in the original broadcast.

Then there's the running story on the U.S. Supreme Court, being done by "CBS Reports." Part One, aired Feb. 20, dealt with the court's controversial history. On March 13, "Storm Over the Supreme Court" (Part II) dealt with the Regents Prayer Case and its impact on nationwide attitudes toward the court. Part III, still to come, will be broadcast in the regular Wednesday evening "CBS Reports" slot immediately following the Monday decision of the court on two Bible reading school cases currently pending.

BBC-TV Scraps Film On Holland Homosexuals

London, May 28.

BBC-TV has scrapped a provocative film specially commissioned by Paul Fox, former editor of the top pubaffairs program "Panorama," featuring "The Link," an offbeat club for homosexuals in Amsterdam, Holland. It will never be screened in any shape or form and the actual film stock may be destroyed and not even retained for the corporation film library.

The feature was filmed for "Panorama" around early February but the new editor, David Wheeler, says it doesn't make a story in itself and that it would "raise an issue" if it went out in normal "Panorama" time as an item of a program. But it is understood to have failed to suggest any quality of mitigation as being of public interest to BBC execs who viewed it privately.

Eight WB Pilot Projects With 3-Web Spread

Warners Bros. tv production wing, reactivated under the aegis of Jack Webb, has eight new tv pilot projects under way for the three major networks, with two other series in preparation.

These are the projects:

For NBC: "The Adventures of Phileas Fogg," plus two other partially developed projects, "Temple Houston" and a Navy troubleshooter series to be produced by Robert Enders. Enders also will produce "Phileas Fogg," derived from Jules Verne characters.

For ABC: "The Federal Investigators," based on the book by Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter Miriam Ottenberger, starring Robert Conrad, with Edmund North set as scripter; "Travels with Charley in Search of America," based on the book by John Steinbeck, will be a joint venture with Stanley Colbert and is being written by Sam Peckinpah; "Wendy and Me," half-hour comedy series, for which George Burns will be creative supervisor and appear as narrator. Dorothy Provine stars; another is an hourlong series titled "GP."

For CBS: "The Paper Year," starring Troy Donahue and Connie Stevens in a hourlong series, created by Robert Sisk and William Ludwig, with Sisk as producer and Ludwig as writer; Don Hinkley and Phil Sharpe will produce "No Time for Sergeants," half-hour series based on the play and pic of the same title. Norman Taurog will direct.

In addition to these projects, Warner Bros. tv division is producing the sixth season of "77 Sunset Strip" for ABC-TV and is preparing a Bette Davis drama. The drama for Miss Davis has Fay Kanin as creator-supervisor, with William Shatner in a costarring role and with Robert Dozier writer.

ABC Int'l Brings Off Big Mex Deal

In one of its biggest breakthroughs into the Latin-American market to date, ABC International Television has made a deal with XHTV, Channel 4 in Mexico City, to represent the latter station in global sales and program buying. Significance of the deal lies in the fact that XHTV is part of the Telesistema Mexicano setup, which has a tight lock on Mexican tv in the key cities and which heretofore has resisted liaisons with foreign tv interests.

The formal licensee of XHTV is Television de Mexico, of which Romulo O'Farrill Jr. is v.p. The deal with ABC International also covers XHTV's two repeater stations in Paso de Cortes and El Zamorano. No ownership participation is involved.

Don Coyle, ABC International prexy, said the new deal has brought the vision of a network linking all the nations of the western hemisphere much closer to reality. Last week, during the flight of astronaut L. Gordon Cooper, XHTV was joined in a live hookup with ABC-TV and CFTO-TV in Toronto, marking tre first time that three North Ameri- CFTO-TV in Toronto, marking the live, simultaneous telecast.

NBC-TV 'Kremlin' In Quickie Repeat

NBC-TV is going to repeat "The Kremlin," the 60-minute color documentary made by Lucy Jarvis and George Vicas in Moscow. Program, aired last Tuesday (21) at 9:30 p.m., will likely get the 7:30 slot on Tuesday, June 4.

It's rare for a network to do a repeat so close to original airdate, but NBC estimates it ought now to capitalize on the fairly unanimous "selling" reviews given it Wednesday (22).

Perhaps the best review the stanza, bearing a made-in-Russia-by-Americans stamp, came from the N. Y. Times' financial page, done in connection with Xerox, which sponsored "Kremlin." The quote is: "In sharp contrast to these performances was staged by Xerox, which soared to a historic high of 201 before closing at 199, up 5½. Market analysts attributed the strength to the effective display of the company's photocopy equipment on a Tuesday evening telecast and the high level of the short interest in the stock. Xerox sold as low as 146½ earlier this year and as low as 87½ at the depth of the 1962 market break."

Xerox is buying the 'Kremlin' repeat. To do this the company had to budget more than it planned this season for tv.

FCC KEY TO VAST WEALTHLAND

If Minow Owned a TV Station

Guesting on Monday night's (27) "David Brinkley Journal" on NBC-TV, outgoing FCC chairman Newton Minow was asked "if you owned and operated a television station, what would you do with it?"

Minow: "If I were lucky enough to have a television station in a major market, I think the first thing I would decide as a matter of philosophy, I would get rich in perhaps three years instead of one. The basic thing I would do would be to regard this as a public trust that I'd been selected out of a number of other people; I'd love to have this opportunity—to perform as a public trustee for everybody, and that means I would decide that sometimes I would not take the program that has the largest audience, necessarily, but the one that would make some contribution to the community.

"I think the public likes to know what's going on in the world; they want to know if we're going to go up in smoke one of these days with a bomb. I would want to have entertainment which would focus on something we'd learn as well as be diverted by. I'd certainly want to have a lot of emphasis on children. I think that would be one of my main issues, late in the afternoon. And I would, in addition to that, hopefully, take entertainment and information and somehow blend them more together than they are today. There seems to be a demarcation line between a public affairs program an entertainment program which I don't think is necessarily sound.

"As you know the networks are organized along the line of having a news department and the other department which is generally entertainment. The fact of the matter is I don't think the public sits down and says I want to be entertained tonight or I want to be informed tonight. They want to be both. The real trick is to make information entertaining and to make entertainment informative. The main things I think I would do with it do not underestimate the public out there. I think that would be my guiding philosophy. I think too many times people in the broadcasting business seem to think as they did in the movie business years ago that the American public has a 12-year-old mentality. I remember Mr. Mencken once said that nobody ever went broke underestimating the intelligence of the American people. I think many broadcasters took that very literally."

TV Webs Assured 3-Week Lapse Between GOP, Dem Conventions

Television networks this week seemed virtually assured of at least a three-week break between the 1964 Republican and Democratic National Conventions, which should greatly ease the strain on the webs if the confabs are held in different cities, as was the case in both 1956 and 1960.

The Republican Convention site selection committee has definitely decided to begin the GOP clan gathering on either July 13 or 20 next year.

A reliable source said the Democratic Convention will be held a date third week in August—already picked by President Kennedy himself.

Miami Beach is considered the best bet for the democrats, although the decision hasn't been reached. The GOP city is still up in the air, and party chieftains vigorously deny a published report that San Francisco has been chosen.

There was only one week between the two conventions in both 1956 and 1960. With the two confabs divided between Chicago and California both times, the webs have to fly tons of equipment and pay stiff overtime bills to get ready for the second convention.

'Week That Was' May Be U.S. 'Is'

General Artists Corp.'s tv sector under the generalship of Herman Rush is out to do for tv what David Merrick and Alex Cohen have done for Broadway on foreign importations.

As result of the recent trip abroad made by Rush and Lester Gottlieb, newly-appointed v.p., creative programming in New York, there are two projects on the upcoming GAC agenda designed for network showcasing. One of them includes a Yank version of the BBC-TV's click "This Is the Week That Was," for which GAC in collaboration with Leland Hayward has obtained the U. S. rights. Bill Harbach has been assigned as producer. Network dickers have already been initiated.

Other project involves an hour-long international comedy show (as a 7:30 to 8:30 network prospect) with top talent recruited from all parts of the world.

Gitlin's 2-Year Pact

Once and for all it is decided, officially. Irving Gitlin, the head of NBC News' Creative Projects unit and therein the man responsible for several DuPont documentaries and the NBC "White Papers," will be back at the network next year.

After months and months of negotiation which at first saw him leaving entirely "to make motion pictures," the executive producer signed a new two-year contract last week.

First year of the new pact will see him do six more DuPont stanzas and four "White Papers." This being similar to his '62-'63 output, it is being assumed he will keep his full complement of present staffers.

Odets' All-Star Scripting Staff On Boone Series

Clifford Odets, who is overseeing all the stories for his and Dick Boone's NBC-TV anthology series next season, has some 20 stories already in the works, in one form or another. Among his reported contributors are William Gibson, John Steinbeck, John O'Hara and Edward Albee.

If they all come through (all reportedly have promised him something) with final scripts, it'll give the Odets-Boone skein the most illustrious list of material writers in the history of commercial video. (Seems tv is becoming voguish among the literary elite; William Inge and Jerome Weidman are going to do series for CBS-TV for the season after next.)

Also, Odets has dickered with the estate of the late James Agee for a story which Tad Mosel, one of tv's best paid writers, will adapt. A. E. Hotchner will reportedly supply another Hemingway adaptation for the series.

And Rod Serling, who does "Twilight one" for CBS-TV and who was quoted as saying he would do a story for Odets on NBC-TV, is nonetheless mentioned

HENRY ALSO IN FOR 2-YR. RIDE?

By GEORGE ROSEN

Since the official resignation of Newton Minow as FCC chairman a couple weeks back there's been some growing concern within top management tv station and network circles as to what kind of man is his successor, E. William Henry.

Like his predecessor — tough, talented, youthful, aggressive — Henry was lifted out of a law firm. That much is known. But more to the point, what isn't known — and it's an aspect that's causing no little apprehension — is whether Henry, like Minow, is going along for the two-year ride or such time as he reaps the rewards of self-promotion and image building.

For if the FCC chairmanship is to become the turnstile through which unknown, ambitious, brilliant and possibly publicity-seeking young men whirl from low paid junior partnerships in big law firms to the status of $75,000 a year executives (awaiting Minow at the Encyclopedia Britannica) in two-year intervals, then many in the industry who have survived several FCC chairmen see chaos, disorder and instability ahead.

Afficionados of the arts of publicity and propaganda concede the Minow genius for managing publicity and press notices. In fact only two weeks before he officially turned in his resignation to President Kennedy, Minow, in a spectacular Sunday double-header of N.Y. Times and N.Y. Herald Tribune punditing couched in praise-laden tone and treatment, demonstrated that his tv skyrocket (for all the fact that it was showering and sputtering back to earth) could attract fully as potent and favorable press notices as when it swooshed into the nation's headlines powered by his now famous "vast wasteland" attack on the three networks two years ago.

For tv and its army of byline scribes who command premium space position (delivering millions of regular readers) in all key newspapers—not to mention TV Guide and other mags — stand ready to supply unprecedented visibility and publicity opportunities to all the future Minows who may see in the FCC chairman's post a temporary strategic position from which to make a sudden and spectacular advance from the low pay and small cubicle of a big law office to the vast income and panelled offices of the executive retreats of corporations anxious to grab and capitalize on the new young hero who has battled the sinister forces of tv on behalf of culture, God and country.

With the Minow pattern neatly cut out in the last two years, the sympathy of the press to the young, poor, idealistic public servant struggling to support his family on the $20,500 FCC chairmanship annual stipend (no matter how much less he may have made in the previous struggling obscurity of his junior law partnership) coupled with the focussed force of the multi-million FCC budget, may—it is feared—prove more attractive to the opportunistic than to those who truly want to serve well and long.

By way of illustration, one net-

Brother Bob's FCC

Washington, May 28.

Robert F. Kennedy's influence is spreading further over the FCC.

The new FCC chairman, E. William Henry, is a protege of the Attorney General. And the newest appointee to FCC, Lee Loevinger, was a Kennedy assistant at Justice as Asst. Atty. Gen. for anti-trust.

One broadcaster here noted: "We're going to have our own answer to the BBC. It's Brother Bob's Commission."

Did British ATV's Norman Collins Go Off Deep End in His Ominous 'Death by Tax' Soundoff to Press?

By JACK PILER

London, May 28.

Norman Collins, deputy chairman of Associated TeleVision, has remained silent this last week as contradiction of his gloomy predictions of the end of indie tv builds up steadily. He had blasted the ears off the government at the dealers' association confab on Monday (20) with a speech attacking it for aiming to bring commercial tv to its knees through the proposed new tv tax. He threatened that if the government did not change its mind most of the present companies would not find it worth reapplying for licenses.

After making his speech—fiery enough in itself with its generalization of the dire fate facing companies like his own—Collins elaborated later to the press to a sensational extent. ATV for one, he dicated, would not want to reapply for its license in 1964 because it wouldn't be wortrh it.

Immediate reraction around the confab area was understandably sympathetic. The following morning as Britain's headlines sang the Collins' forebodings, the first strains of embarrassed disagreement showed up. Commercial tv toppers found sympathy with Collins in his full bloodied blast along the lines that this tax would force commercial companies to reduce drastically the quality and standard of their service because they could not afford to continue present degree of ambitious program production.

But there was a distinct wedge of opinion among indie execs that he had gone too far, and ended up sounding rather arrogant with a petulant threat like a spoilt child —"Give us our own way or we won't play!" A number of execs in the shelter of anonymity felt that Collins had laid it all on a bit thick and that the chances of the government taking him seriously were negligible, Indeed around the parliamentary lobbies the reaction was that if the present crew won't take up their licenses next year there would always be somebody else ready to take its place.

In fact while the other commercial companies—majors, who had been in on Collins' intended speech in its drafting stages, and regionals who had continued to be left out on the sidelines—remained stoicly

Ted Bates 'Music Man'

In what is believed the first instance of a major advertising agency pacting a musical director to ride herd on all its tv-radio commercials, Harry Sosnik is joining the Ted Bates agency as its "music man." Post will also entail Sosnik's becoming involved in composing music for the agency accounts.

Deal will permit Sosnik to carry out his summer assignment as music director of the "Celebrity Talent Scouts" show on CBS. He also plans to continue on other network assignments. He has one of the more enviable track records in the tv (and before that radio) musical backgrounding picture.

Everybody Asks: What Gives With Dave Schoenbrun?

A cool, arms length relationship now exists between David Schoenbrun, CBS News chief European correspondent, and the CBS News brass, topped by Dick Salant.

Either there will be a healing of the breach or a divorce of Schoenbrun from the CBS News operation in the near future. Only one week ago, Schoenbrun, as CBS News chief European correspondent, considered himself anchorman for the web's radio and tv coverage of President Kennedy's forthcoming European trip.

Today, based on a CBS News release, Douglas Edwards is anchorman for the Kennedy coverage in Europe and Schoenbrun's name is absent from the list of CBS News correspondents covering the June 20-29 Presidential visit.

The breach is clearly evident. The only question is whether the present problems can be resolved to the mutual satisfaction of the parties. Neither Schoenbrun nor Salant would respond directly to this question. Inferences in the CBS News release though are clear.

The same "no comment" climate existed when Howard K. Smith exited some time ago as chief Washington correspondent for CBS News. It was in this climate that CBS News and Smith worked out the cancellation of their contract.

Schoenbrun, though, has proven to be more resilient. There were rumors of his departure from CBS News when he was shifted from

ABC-TV's SRO ON 'FARMER'S DAUGHTER'

A steady flow of business over the past 10 days is helping ABC-TV plug up the minute holes on its fall schedule. "The Farmer's Daughter" became SRO when Liggett & Myers bought half of the show, the other half going to Clairol. This is the half-hour situation comedy on Friday nights starring Inger Stevens.

Polaroid came through for about $1,000,000 worth of minutes in a primetime scatter plan, including participation in the Jerry Lewis and Jimmy Dean shows, among others. B. F. Goodrich also has bought some assorted nighttime minutes on the web. Sterling Drug has picked up one-third of the "Patty Duke" show.

ABC-TV also racked up an important daytime sale to Purex of a five-minute strip featuring Lisa Howard in a commentary pitched to the ladies. This is being slotted at 2:55 to 3 p.m.

NBC's $4,000,000 Daytime TV Sales

Six of NBC-TV's 12 daytime programs are sold out for the fourth quarter of the year. The sales picture at the network was bolstered heavily last week when an estimated $4,000,000 in daytime sales occurred.

Two key buys were by Mentholatum for approximately $725,000 worth of minutes in NBC-TV and by Vicks with $675,000 set for the fourth quarter of '63 and first quarter of '64.

There has been no Vicks daytime biz at NBC-TV since 1956 when the bankroller bought into "Home," a program long since departed.

Over 900 minutes are represented in the daytime buys made last week. Aside from Mentholatum and Vicks, there were buys by S. C. Johnson, Kellogg, Campbell's, Alcoa, Heublein and Lehn & Fink.

Seems the best—and heaviest—concentration of activity in predark was the NBC-TV morning programs. Web benefitted from an overflow from CBS-TV's successful afternoon schedule, and since most of the NBC ayem sked is strong that's where the overflow seems to have settled.

Meantime, parts of the NBC-TV daytime sked are in upheaval (see separate story).

Something-for-Everybody Keys Television's '63 Com'l Festival —On Other Adv. Agency Fronts

The stupendous characteristics of the 1963 Television Commercials Festival were the crowd in the main ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria, N. Y., and the sardine treatment it was accorded by the hotel banquet staff. The crowd was very large and it isn't entirely unfair to say that nearly everybody there must've won something since there were so many awards in so many categories.

Nevertheless, some of the commercials that won, this, the fourth time Wally Ross has had his American TV Commercials Festival, were, as usual, appealing artistically and most probably compelling merchandisers for some sponsor or another. There was, during the hustle-the-crockery luncheon, a very fine short subject, novel and witty, to indicate the kinds of commercials done in 1962. (The period of eligibility for a "Clio," however, was March, '62, to March '63.)

For an award organization that seems annually to place a high premium on the cleverness and artistry of its winners, some of last Friday's (24) Clios went to some fairly obvious, shallow, even inept blurbs. It's entirely possible, considering that some categories deserved no plaudits, that the Clios are no less subject to politics than the Emmys, the Oscars or whathaveyou.

It was unfortunate that Ross and his festival directors let the Waldorf management crowd the room so. Furthermore, some of the service was faulty in the extreme, with waiters dropping dishes being the least of the problem. A couple of rudeness awards were probably handed out in the kitchen after the luncheon was over.

Following are a list of some key winners:

Best Overall Series—Goodyear's "Go, Go Goodyear" from VPI Productions via Y&R. (It won best in auto accessories too.)

TV Set Sale Brisk But Lag for Radio

Washington, May 28.

Television set sales are making a brisk quarterly advance but radio sales are lagging.

Electronic Industries Assn. reported tv distributer sales for the first quarter of 1963 at 1,641,617 compared to last year's 1,567,987 quarterly mark.

Radio quarterly sales fell from 2,177,988 in 1962 to 1,887,894 this round.

March sales marked an advance for both radio and tv.

Tv distrib sales in March were 601,797 a jump from the 535,999 of February.

Radio sales hopped from 616,036 in February to 818,510 in March.

UHF tv sales continued their upward climb from 134,647 in the first quarter 1962 to 198,226 for 1963.

Top of the Emmys: 'The Tunnel'

NBC News' "The Tunnel" and the CBS-TV series, "The Defenders," won a fistful of Emmys Sunday (26) as the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences gave its 1962-1963 prizes. "The Tunnel," showing the escape of several East Germans last summer, was named "Program of the Year" in addition to its other accolades.

NBC-TV won 12 Emmys, mainly in news and public affairs. CBS-TV copped 13, and ABC-TV won three. One of the CBS-TV 13 was for WCBS-TV, the network owned & operated station in N.Y., which won the first national station award given by the Academy. It was for a documentary, "Superfluous People."

First international Emmy award went to Granada TV. England, for its version of "War & Peace."

Academy Trustee kudos this year were to President Kennedy, to AT&T for Telstar and a posthumous award to Dick Powell.

GORDO ORBITS AND TV OBITS

CBS' Philharmonic: 33 & Skidoo

Last Saturday night (25) marked a milestone in broadcasting annals. After 33 years—only two years shy of the network's inception—CBS Radio did its last performance of the New York Philharmonic concerts. During that period the network gave upwards of $5,000,000 to the Philharmonic Society for the privilege of broadcasting the symph concerts.

But with the changing patterns in radio broadcasting, this took a bit of doing in recent years. For all the pressures from affiliates to "let's skip it" and the growing practice of shunting the concerts into early morning and other "twilight zone" periods, it's to the credit of CBS prexy Art Hayes that he stuck with it so long, pressures or no.

But with tempus fugiting at too fast a clip, CBS signed off on Saturday.

The declining audience pace is reflected in the following Pulse ratings for the seven o & o stations:

1953 it had a 3.9.
1958 it had a 2.7.
1963 it had a 0.7.

Hagerty to Stick With Lang's Basic Operational News Policy

ABC News chief Jim Hagerty accepted the resignation of his No. 2 man, Bob Lang, last week, but will continue the basic operational policy set by the departed executive. Under this policy, the emphasis has been on dressing up the web's tv news shows with on-the-air personalities and giving more responsibility to the producers of the shows for the selection and positioning of the news.

Hagerty, whose original attitude towards tv news stemmed from his belief that "you don't have to look pretty to be a good reporter," said that his attitude has been modified by his experience since taking over the top ABC news spot over two years ago. "The industry is evolving and so am I," he said. Hagerty said that he has informed all affected personnel within the news department, many of whom were hired by Lang, that there would be no change in their status under the latest administrative shakeup.

Lang's exit from ABC-TV after an 18-month tenure in which his star seemed to be in steady ascendancy stemmed from an accumulation of deep-going disagreements with Hagerty over the direction and operation of the web's news department. Lang had handed in his resignation a couple of times before, but had been persuaded to stay with the understanding that his policy would be followed.

The most recent dispute between Hagerty and Lang involved the buttressing of the web's corps of correspondents in several key areas of the world. Where Hagerty reportedly wanted to stick with the reporters on hand, Lang insisted on dressing up the staff with newsmen with more tv appeal. Lang bowed out when the AB-PT toppers, prexy Leonard H. Goldenson and exec v.p. Si Siegel, indicated that they were no longer supporting Lang in his battle with Hagerty.

Lang, who was brought into ABC by the company's top echelon as an experienced broadcasting aide to Hagerty, developed immediate differences with his chief. Where Hagerty had the concept of hiring working newsmen as commentators, Lang favored more accent on reporters with on-the-air personalities.

Shortly after Lang joined ABC

Lee Rich, 20th-TV Still Dickering

Hollywood, May 28.

Discussions are still going between Lee Rich, tv head of Benton & Bowles, and Darryl Zanuck, 20th-Fox prexy, regarding Rich's appointment as head of the studio's tv division. "We're still talking but it isn't settled yet," declared Rich on his arrival from N.Y. "I have asked for complete autonomy in running the operation and staffing the personnel. I will meet again with Zanuck either in Hollywood or when I return to N.Y. He knows my terms and if there is agreement there should be a deal."

Bob Maxwell, Rudy Abel Exit MGM-TV; Go Indie

Hollywood, May 28.

Producers Bob Maxwell and Rudy Abel have exited MGM-TV, where they produced studio's "National Velvet" and "Father of the Bride" series, both of which have been axed.

They have checked onto the Goldwyn lot, to return to indie production. They are readying for 1964-65 two hour dramatic ventures, "House of Mystery" and "The Guilty," and two half-hour series, "Jodie" and "Venus, Incorporated."

4 Star Rolls On Expanded Roster; Taylor's Stripes

Hollywood, May 28

Charles Boyer revealed over the weekend that Robert Taylor has been tapped for Four Star veepee stripes following board action Taylor had been swapped Four Star stock for his interest in company's "Robert Taylor's Detectives" TV skein. Holding principal chunk of Four Star stock are Boyer, David Niven, the Dick Powell Estate, Taylor, George Elber, Tom McDermott, company prexy.

Boyer this week lenses seven new host spots for "The Dick Powell Theatre" replacing, for syndication, hosting stints dispatched by guest stars following Dick Powell's death. New hosts' footage is being inserted for legal reasons.

Four Star is still in process of prepping an inaugural slate of feature pix to be produced by Martin Manulis, declares Boyer. He lists "The Out of Towners," "Cassandra and the Wedding" and "Born to Glory" among properties being readied for feature lensing. Company though limited to only "Amos Burke" and "The Robert Taylor Show" on next season's prime web skeds has all but wrapped deal for two daytime strips, one a panel show, the other tagged "Great Ideas," states Boyer. They are also deep into pilot propping for the '64-'65 season, he adds.

Next on Boyer's thesping slate is Terrence Ratigan's "Man and Boy" which British director Peter Wood is being paged to direct. Play is skedded for a September-October London run then is slated to launch its Broadway run.

Boyer will sky to Paris at the end of this week where he will dub his role in "Love Is a Ball," the latest film, into French under French law dubbing of any film slated for French screening must be accomplished in France.

Boyer wound starring stint in S. N. Behrman's "Lord Pengo" in April after 195 performances on Broadway.

NBC'S RUNAWAY CUES ANXIETIES

NBC-TV's runaway performance (critical reaction and rating charts) on the Gordo Cooper orbiting and subsequent New York reception accorded the astronaut, has triggered fresh waves of anxiety and some drastic steps among the competitors, particularly on the part of ABC, in a bid to stem what has all the earmarks of an NBC avalanche on the news front.

Even before Cooper was resettled on Texas terra firma, the networks' stock-taking of the seven days of exalted looping and exalting tributes jet-propelled a round-robin of activity which, even if only coincidentally linked with the week of frantic tv coverage, saw:

1.) Bob Lang exiting ("differences over policy") as v.p. and administrative boss of the news operation (see separate story) with prexy Leonard Goldenson and news chieftain Jim Hagerty huddling on future modus operandi to give the network a more solid footing and recognition in the news sweepstakes. (ABC trailed a poor third on the N.Y. rating returns despite some singularly effective individual "performances," although this standing was expected by the web and was not a key factor in the longstanding Hagerty-Lang struggle for power.

2.) CBS' news chieftain Dick Salant, who in two years since taking over the news operation succeeded in giving it a new respectability which, as recent as last November's election, brought CBS News up to NBC par, began some searching reexamination to find out what went wrong and why. (As frequently happens when specifics are lacking but when, nonetheless, something's got to give, the network, in a maneuver more reminiscent of an earlier and less enlightened era, read the riot act to the press relations boys.

3.) Simply by playing it straight and unexpurgated and adhering to the Bob Kintner credo that a hot news story is worth staying with, schedules or no schedules, NBC News, under the Kintner-Bill McAndrew-Julian Goodman administrative triumvurate, forged ahead in the intermural sweepstakes with some resounding payoffs. (It was also evident in last Sunday night's Emmy awards.)

Pool Problems

By the time Cooper had finished parading up lower Broadway on Wednesday (22), CBS and NBC News officials were talking about avoiding further pool ties with ABC News. The mobile camera, assigned to move up the street in front of the Cooper convertible, went dead and the networks had to depend on fixed camera positions to get their pictures.

CBS and NBC were miffed because the dead ABC camera, supplied for the pool, carried the ABC logo, which was picked up on many of the fixed cameras tracing the parade.

Don Hewitt, CBS-TV producer, had no comment about the desire of NBC and CBS officials to find ways out of "nervous" ABC pooled coverage, but he did say: "I was very disappointed we had no coverage during the parade from the mobile unit provided the pool by ABC."

"At CBS we wouldn't accept an assignment unless we were sure we could handle it."

Hewitt also addressed himself to the identification carried on the dead ABC camera. "In all the pools," he said, "we make it a point to cover up the CBS eye on all the cameras. NBC covers up its identification too. Now, I don't think we ever put that agreement in writing but it is an agreement."

Probably if CBS and NBC make a further issue of cutting out ABC News, at least as the source of any pool, it would, insofar as other manshoots are concerned, depend on the compliance of NASA. Ditto most other governmental functions.

TV Not to Queens (Boro, That Is) Taste; FC&B's Study Reveals Only 14% of Homes Tuned in at Night

Coop's AFTRA Card

Gordon Cooper, billed by the union as the first American to televise live while orbiting in space, has joined the American Federation of Television & Radio Artists.

Well, he's an honorary member anyway. He got his card last week from Leon Janney, N.Y. chapter prexy.

Foote, Cone & Belding veepee and director of marketing service Paul E. J. Gerhold rolled out his agency's "Queens Study" last week for the Assn. of National Advertisers New York spring meeting, giving delegates who were "tired of television's typical large numbers"—as he put it—"some substantially more modest ones."

Made in Queens County, New York, in March and April of '61 among tv-owning telephone homes, the study showed only 14.4% of the homes turned to the average nighttime network show. This, said Gerhold, was almost four whole rating points lower than the 18.3% average rating shown by the last report of one of the rating services for the whole New York Metropolitan area for the same shows in the same period.

"But the tuning figures are only the beginning of the findings," said the research exec. Survey also showed: only 9.4% of the housewives viewed some part of the average network tv show; only 6.8% of the housewives could remember, the next day, that they actually had seen the commercial; and 2.5% of the housewives could remember and could prove they saw it by recalling something it said or showed.

"Am I right in guessing that you have never before heard such small figures used to describe the reach and performance of evening network television?" asked Gerhold. And, he said, the figures have since been substantiated by further research along the same lines.

While the study indicated there was considerable puff in the ratings, it was primarily designed to measure housewives as well as households; commercials as well as programs; and exposure and retention as well as tuning.

Balance of the ANA presentation concerned findings reproduct categories and analysis of daytime and nighttime commercial impact, but the outline of how the study was conducted is of interest.

Said Gerhold, "The research reported here was preceded by months of experimentation, development and testing . . . We started with the aim of designing research that would serve the needs of the buyers, rather than the vendors, of television advertising."

He said 13 sets of recording forms and interview instructions had to be developed for the final operation. Considerable time was spent in training interviewers and monitors and on direct supervision of telephone interviewing. "We covered about 40 interview-

Kemper Antitrust Suit Vs ABC-TV In Alger Hiss Sequel

As a belated repercussion of the Alger Hiss appearance on the Howard K. Smith ABC-TV show last November, an antitrust suit with possible far-ranging impact on the whole tv industry was filed against ABC-TV by Kemper Insurance in N. Y. Federal Court last week. Kemper is currently the defendant in a breach-of-contract suit initiated by ABC after Kemper pulled out of its sponsorship of the web's early evening news with Ron Cochran, because the latter show ran a billboard for the Smith stanza which carried the Hiss segment.

Kemper charged that ABC tied the sale of its news shows on 96 stations in markets desired by Kemper to sale of an additional 35 stations in markets where Kemper did not wish to advertise. Kemper said it finally acceded because the news show was needed for its advertising campaign.

Kemper charged that the alleged tie-in arrangements imposed by ABC on its advertisers and affiliates have resulted in substantially restricting competition in the purchase of time on the web's affiliates. The suit further charged that the network setup diverts national advertising revenues through the networks and away from the network's affiliates and coerces advertisers into buying time in unwanted market areas. The suit also charged that the setup deprives the small advertisers of access to audiences in the morre valuable time periods.

Summing up, the complaint stated ABC's "all or nothing" course on sales of network time in this case combined to violate the Federal antitrust laws and hence the web should not be allowed to recover from Kemper because of the latter's cancellation.

Although Kemper was not involved in the bankrolling of Smith's show, it defended its exit from the Cochran show on grounds that its reputation had been damaged materially by the cross-plug. It also said that the plug also violated a provision whereby ABC agreed not to promote a competing business during the Kemper-sponsored show. The Smith show was sponsored by Nationwide Insurance.

Although the question of option time, which the Kemper suit raises, has been through the mill of various Governmental agencies, including the FCC, this legal action is believed to be precedental in throwing its legality into the lap of the Federal courts.

Merrill's 'Call Banion'

Hollywood, May 28.

Garry Merrill has been set for a vidseries project, "Call Banion," to be vidfilmed by Harmon Productions, in which Debbie Reynolds and Irving Briskin are partnered.

Louis Shaw will pen "Banion," which deals with the adventures of a bail bondsman. Shaw will also be associate producer on the series.

NBC-TV Loops In 9 Gordo Sponsors

Chicago, May 28.

Indicating that there is always some ready loose coin about for a hot actuality like Gordon Cooper's 22 loops around the earth, NBC-TV scared up a total of nine sponsors on virtually a moment's notice to underwrite the special manshoot programs that Gulf Oil's budget couldn't handle.

Gulf, which has been NBC-TV's blank check sponsor-from-heaven for instant specials, asked out of some of the network's followup coverage of Gordo's adventures in and out of space because it felt it had already secured its identification with the event and because it had spent enough of its wad on the actual blastoff and the first day's postponed shot.

When NBC decided to go all night with an elongated version of "Today," starting at 1 ayem to follow Cooper's final orbits, Gulf took the first 15 minutes of each hour of the mid-morning. The net-

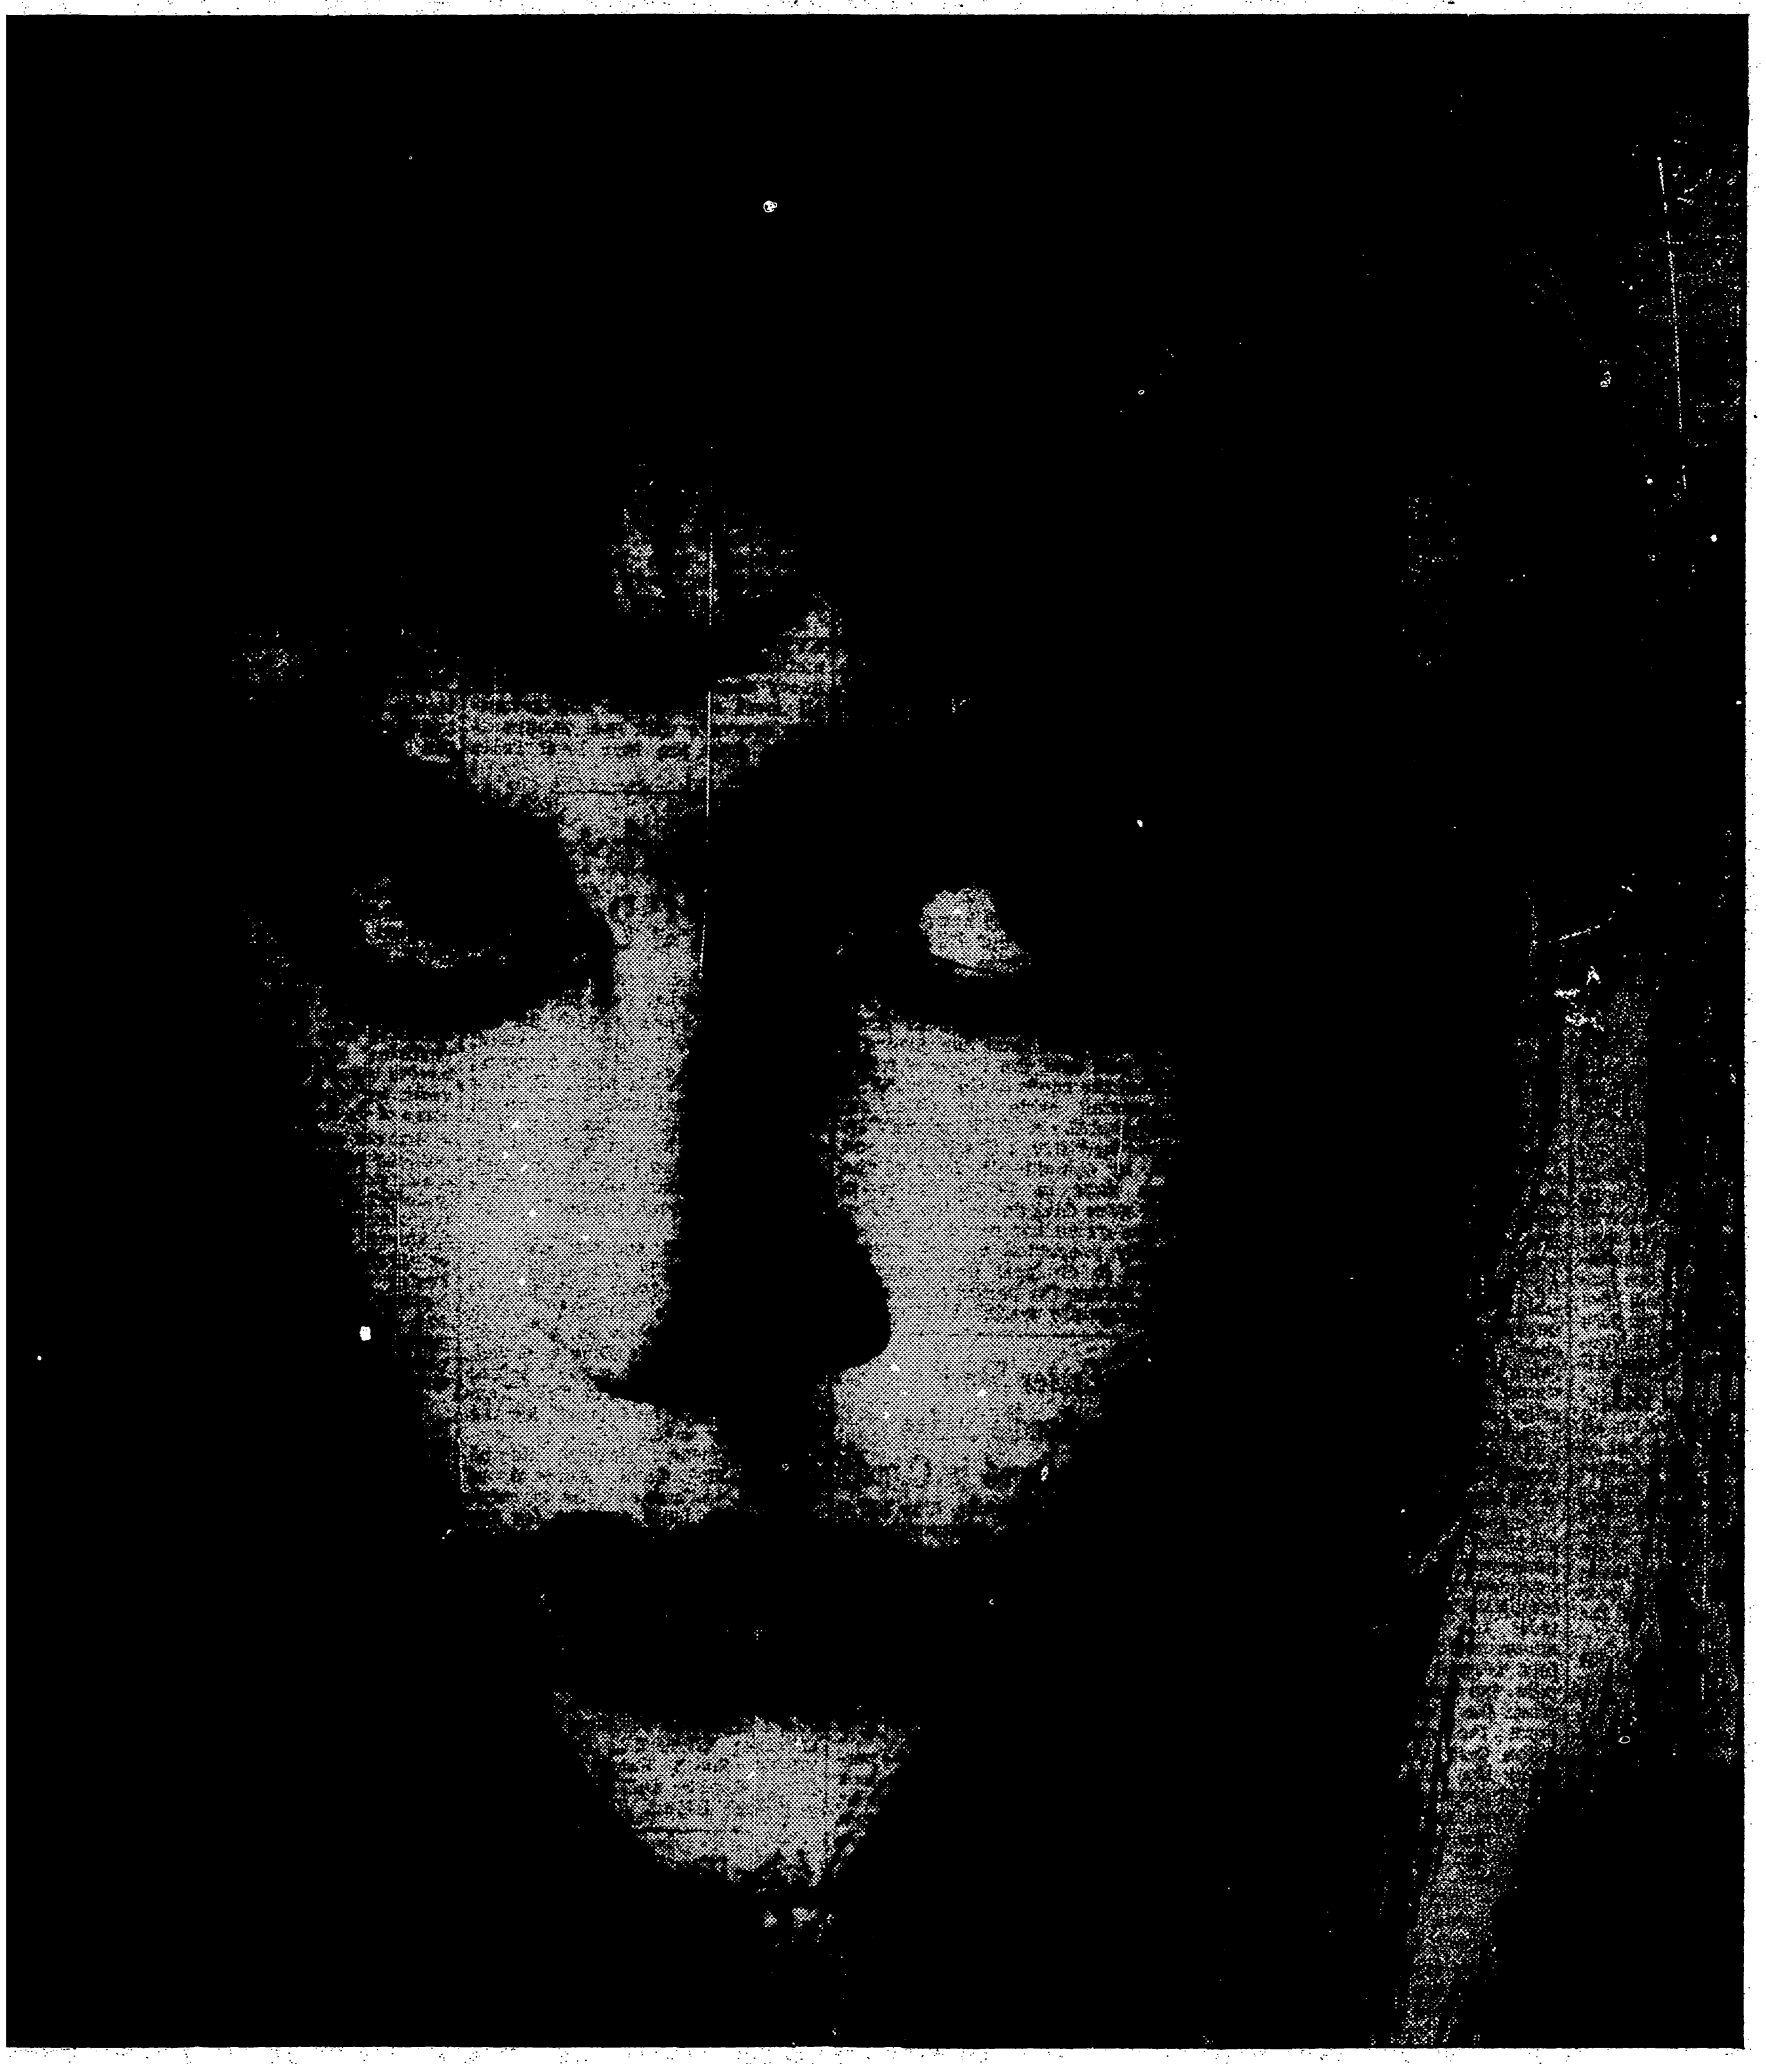
Better Than Ever

There's a world of difference between the passionate posturing of Theda Bara and the child-woman blandishments of Brigitte Bardot. And it's a world well worth the exploring.

But, fascinating as it is, the evolution in screen sirens is just one of the movieland developments to be examined in the new series tentatively called "The Hollywood Story." Scheduled right after NBC-TV's Monday-night movies, the weekly program becomes a highlight of NBC's diversified schedule in the Fall.

The series—created by David L. Wolper and produced by him and Jack Haley, Jr.—offers a kaleidoscopic look at five decades of films. Wolper and his subject have already kaleided three times, and the happy results were "The Golden Years"; "The Fabulous Era"; and "The Great Stars"—a warmly received trio of television specials.



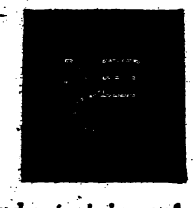
Among the myriad filmland phenomena slated to come under the new show's fond scrutiny are:

The gangster movies—with such beloved public enemies as Bogart, Cagney and Robinson brass-knuckling their way to top billing.

The monster cycle—in which the likes of Chaney, Lugosi and Karloff proved that looks aren't everything.

The comedy approach—from the Keystone Cops taking a corner on two reels, to Doris Day and Rock Hudson swapping sotto voce pillow talk.

In all, "The Hollywood Story" shapes up as an out-of-the-ordinary portrait of the silver screen. As such, it's a fitting entry in NBC-TV's way-out-of-the-ordinary Fall schedule—a varied lineup that ranges from proven favorites like "Hazel" and "The Eleventh Hour" to such newcomers as "The Bill Dana Show" and the "Mr. Novak" dramas. We've never looked forward to so dazzling a season.



Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

Pittsburgh TV Stations Reexamine Costs Sheets in Stepped-Up Rivalry

By LENNY LITMAN

Pittsburgh, May 28.

With the FCC "suggesting" commercial content and the pool of feature films gradually drying up, Pittsburgh, with its three VHF stations all vying for business, are taking a hard look at its cost sheet. Where previous economic problems could be handled by a slightly higher rate card and by the station absorbing some of the increased cost it is no longer that easy.

Cuts must be made in other areas because there is only so much room at the sponsor's breast and the vital aspects of production and programming can not make much more room for additional costs without sacrificing existing quality. The fixed overhead of a general staff, labor unions, and the general cost of operation were set in an era when tv was making a lot of money and these costs cannot be cut unless the entire fabric of the organization is destroyed.

The question is how long can costs be absorbed. When WDTV and its successor, KDKA-TV, was the only station in town, the annual gross was around $10,000,000 with almost one-third representing profit. After WIIC and WTAE came in, business had to be divided three ways and even though the take was greatly increased it never has come anywhere near the original profit level.

With the feature film the main source of programming, the stations here bought up what was available at around $150 a title and now the price is closer to $2,500 a title for a good picture and very little to be had even at this price. It was this shortage that prompted KDKA-TV, part of Group W, to grab at the chance of becoming part of the Mike Douglas syndication. This move allows the station to eliminate its daily film feature at one p.m. It now has a film on for "The Early Show" at 5:30 and the show on "Swing Shift Theatre" which follows the "Steve Allen Show."

When the station was WDTV, "Swing Shift Theatre" went on all night during 1951 and 1952 but at that time, it was using old releases from Republic, Monogram, Eagle-Lion, foreign films and everything that could be bought from independent distributors. The all night programming stopped when these films were used over and over again and no others came on the market.

Today when a film block becomes available all stations are interested but only WTAE is badly in need of product because of its nightly "Million Dollar Movie" at 11:15 p.m., which is opposite Steve Allen and "Johnny Carson Show."

18-MARKET SALE ON SEBRING RACE

Triangle Stations has sold its half-hour color film production of the Sebring 12-hour endurance auto race to stations in 18 markets. Triangle Stations group sent its film crew to Sebring, Fla., earlier his year to cover the event.

Half-hour special also has been sold to advertisers in the Triangle markets.

"The 12-hour Grind," title of the sports one-shot, was sold to WPIX, N.Y.; WLW-C, Columbus; WJRT, Flint, Mich.; WDAF, Kansas City, Mo.; WTTV, Indianapolis; WGR, Buffalo; and KRON, San Francisco.

Schaefer Beer and Eldon Toy are sponsoring the program on the Triangle outlets and in several other markets. Slips bought the program.

Douglas Syndie Entry Cancelled

Cleveland, May 28.

An unresolvable hassle with the American Federation of Radio-Television Artists over the waiver of certain fees has forced the cancellation of syndication plans for the "Mike Douglas Show," a 90-minute daytime live talent show now running on KYW-TV, the Westinghouse station here. Under tentative waivers by AFTRA of the fees, it was planned to syndicate the show on all five Group W's tv stations.

In the last week, however, AFTRA made proposals about fees which KYW said would make it uneconomical to syndicate the show. Management said that anything short of permanent waivers would make it impossible to make sales and talent commitments on a realistic basis. AFTRA, however, had never offered more than a conditional waiver for a period of 90 days.

One of the key issues involved payment to announcers of fees for performances of off-camera announcements. In spite of the fact that KYW's contract does not provide for such payments, announcers began to request these fees several months ago. KYW paid the requested amounts, but when the discrepancy was discovered, the station informed the union that it would gradually recover the fees paid in error. The initial proposal from AFTRA about the Douglas show was that KYW stop recovering these overpayments and return the coin already recovered. In subsequent proposals, AFTRA pressed for off-camera fees, these fees to be paid retroactively to November, 1958.

Another issue involved the station's payment to AFTRA's pension and welfare funds. Currently, the station pays 5% of each member's gross scale income into the fund. The union insisted that KYW pay the 5% on all income, scale and overscale, retroactive to November, 1961, for staff and freeland members.

Chi TV Steps Up Hiring of Negroes

Chicago, May 28.

NBC News in Chicago, which serves the local o&o stations (WNBQ and WMAQ) in addition to the network, has hired away William C. Matney Jr. from the Detroit News as a reporter-newscaster. He will be the first Negro newsman on the local NBC staff and the third to be hired by a Chicago television station, in less than a year.

Both of the other Negro newsmen were signed by WBBM-TV. The first, Ben Holman, came from the Chi Daily News and graduated to CBS News in New York a few months after his WBBM tenure. The second, Wendell Smith, replaced Holman here and came from the Chicago American.

Matney joins NBC News on June 10, after three years as rewrite man and general assignment reporter on the Detroit paper. Prior to that he was managing editor of the Michigan Chronicle. He's married to legit singer Irene Williams.

A spokesman for NBC News stated emphatically that Matney has been "hired on his merits and not because he's a Negro." That's how WBBM-TV and CBS put it too. The conclusion would seem to be that Negro newsmen are suddenly beginning to show merit.

'SAINT' FIRST-RUNS SET IN 12 MARKETS

"The Saint," the only first-run hourlong series being distributed by a major syndicator, has chalked up sales in 12 markets. Introduced by Independent Television Corp. at the last NAB convention, slow sales pace on the Roger Moore starrer is said to reflect the company's determination to secure what it considers fair prices.

Major markets of N.Y., Chicago and Los Angeles, have not been sold to date. Sales have been chalked up with the following stations, KTVU, San Francisco; WCPO, Cincinnati; KXTV, Sacramento; WTTV, Indianapolis; KING, Seattle; KCTO, Denver; WKRG, Mobile; WTAR, Norfolk; WFTV, Orlando, Fla.; WCSH, Portland, Me.; WTVN, Columbus, O.; and WHBF, Rock Island, Ill.

The Red That Fled

Minneapolis, May 28.

Credit is being given to 20th-Fox's local KMSP-TV here, with much approbation for Jim McGovern, its public affairs director, for routing the Communist party out of Minnesota.

It now has developed that what turned the trick was a KMSP-TV documentary last Jan. 6 exposing the party's supposedly secret activities in the state. An almost immediate result was the closing of the Minesota party headquarters, located here, on orders from the national heads in New York.

McGovern dug up a former party member to glean most of the material for his documentary. It was stuff about the Communist party in Minnesota that never has been on the air before.

KXTV's Renewal Despite Squawks

Washington, May 28.

FCC dismissed the complaint of an objecting group and unanimously gave KXTV, a Sacramento, Calif., channel 10 station, a full three-year renewal.

The complaint had been filed by an outfit called the Citizens for Better Broadcasting under the chairmanship of Harry Finks of Sacramento.

The committee told FCC there was a dearth of local live programming and said the licensee failed to meet the needs of the area. FCC, in turning aside the objection, noted that the NABET and AFTRA unions had struck the station and that, by coincidence, four of the seven days in FCC's composite week were days during that strike.

"The strike hampered and occasionally prevented normal station efforts to do local live programming during the period covered by the composite week," FCC said.

'Jerry Lester Show' As a Syndie Series Produced in Canada

Toronto, May 28.

Claimed first internationally syndicated series to be produced in Canada, "Jerry Lester Show" is skedded for the fall on the CTV Television Network Ltd., with nine trans-Canada CTV affiliated outlets listed as rivals to the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. web. CTV will carry the series as well as some two dozen U.S. tv stations.

Canadian talent will be used, plus internationally famous performers, in each of the one-hour shows and will be drawn from tv, stage, niteries and "little" revues. Skedded for the first few weeks are Pat Suzuki, Bobby Darin, Morey Amsterdam, Rudy Vallee and Denise Darcel. "Jerry Lester Show" will be seen Friday nights in the nine trans-Canada cities but no time slot has been announced.

OF's Marilyn Monroe Seg In 24 Foreign Markets

Official Films has sold "Marilyn Monroe," its half-hour special, in 24 foreign markets to date.

The special will be put into domestic syndication for fall release following its second network showing on ABC-TV Sunday, June 23 at 9:30 p.m. Rebroadcast is being sponsored by Alberto-Culver.

Latest foreign sales have been made in Belgium, France, Brazil, Japan, Okinawa, Sweden, Mexico, Kenya, Gibraltar, Trinidad, Iraq, Syria, and Kuwait. Special is also being shown at U.S. military installations throughout the world by the Armed Forces Radio and Television Service.

Seawright to MPO-TV

Hollywood, May 28.

Roy Seawright has joined the West Coast operation of MPO-TV of California, MPO production veepee Mel Dellar disclosed.

Seawright was founder and veepee of Cascade Pictures until ousted recently in a proxy fight with Cascade prexy Barney Carr, over management policy.

Metromedia Way Out in Outdoor (Foster & Kleiser) Ad Innovating

Outdoor advertising, the oldest form of hidden persuasion and the most fixed in format over the centuries, is on the threshold of an electronic era that promises to revolutionize the medium. By no coincidence, the new development is being financed and spearheaded by Foster & Kleiser, a division of Metromedia, which owns the Metropolitan chain of radio-tv stations.

Ross Barrett, prexy of Foster & Kleiser, which operates in the west coast region, said the new development would introduce the concept of time segment sales into the outdoor field. An advertiser would be able to buy a billboard in a high traffic location from 6 to 9 p.m. and then change copy as frequently as desired by means of television-type projection from a central station.

The laboratory model of the electronic billboard was developed by the Stanford Research Institute and the manufacturing prototype is now being engineered by Fairchild Instrument Corp. on Long Island. Barrett could not say how long it would be before electronic billboards will be placed in the field.

Foster & Kleiser, which does $20,000,000 volume annually, accounted for 40% of Metromedia's gross last year and 20% of its profit. This year, it's projected that this division will do 50% of the volume and 30% of the profit. F&K is the largest outdoor advertising operation in the U.S., having topped General Outdoor Advertising when the latter spun off some of its holdings.

Barrett acknowledged that the outdoor advertising field has been under persistent attack for allegedly defacing the American landscape. Legislation is continually being introduced in various states to curb or eliminate outdoor advertising. Foster & Kleiser, however, has learned to roll with the punches and has evolved a civic-minded program for outdoor advertising which has won converts even among the critics.

Barrett said his company agreed that the country's scenic areas must be safeguarded from commercialization of all types. He believes, however, that in areas where there already exist commercial enterprises, outdoor advertising has a legitimate place. The reputable outdoor advertising companies, Barrett said, have been cooperating with other groups in working out legislation in this direction.

Although acceptance of advertising copy is not an important problem in the outdoor field, Barrett said that medium's sense of responsibility cued his company's refusal to carry a sign calling for the impeachment of Chief Justice Earl Warren. Barrett said he presumed it came from the Birch Society. Only a couple of small

'HERCULES' WOWS 'EM IN TEXAS TV BOW

In its first telecast in the south, "Hercules" hit an ARB of 28 in the Dallas-Fort Worth market over station KTVT. The ARB rating represented a 59% share of the audience in the four channel market.

Rating for the Joseph E. Levine pic exceeded the combined results of the three other tv stations during the 9:30 to 11 p.m. time slot on Friday, May 17. KTVT credited "Hercules" with achieving the highest rating every scored by any pic on the station.

Backing the "Hercules" telecast, KTVT undertook an extensive promotional campaign, which included heavy use of large display ads in all local newspapers and saturation coverage with spot announcements over the four local radio stations.

Multi-Market Deal On M-G Post '48s

MGM-TV has come up with the first multi-market deal for feature films made directly with an advertiser. Under the agreement, Drewrys Ltd., a midwest brewery, bought three MGM post-1948 films on an individual basis for showing in 10 midwestern markets. The company also bought full sponsorship of the same films in an additional five markets where the films have already been licensed to stations.

Drewrys will sponsor each of the films directly preceding holiday weekends. First such film is "Angels in the Outfield" which kicks off this week as a lead-in to the Decoration Day weekend. "Green Fire" will unreel before the July 4 holiday and "The Tender Trap" will be telecast for the Labor Day weekend.

The brewery, through its ad agency, McFarland, Aveyard of Chicago, worked out the arrangements with local stations for the single showings on the dates requested. Markets licensed directly are WJBK-TV, Detroit; WSPD-TV, Toledo; WANE-TV, Fort Wayne; KRBT-TV, Des Moines; WMT-TV, Cedar Rapids; WWYV, Cadillac; WJIM-TV, Lansing; WJRT-TV, Flint; WLUC-TV, Marquette; and WTHI-TV, Terre Haute. Drewrys also bought the films on WGN-TV, Chicago; WISH-TV, Indianapolis; WSBT, South Bend; WOOD-TV, Grand Rapids; and WHBF, Davenport-Rock Island.

4 Star Direct-to-Client Deal on 'Detective'

Off-network "The Detective" series has picked up a local sponsor buy in Austin, representing the few, but growing direct-to-sponsor deals involving off-network properties.

Four Star Distributing sold the series to the Mutual Savings & Loan Assn. of Austin and Roy Butler Lincoln-Mercury dealership, for placement on KTBC-TV, Austin. Earlier this year, according to Four Star v.p., Len Firestone, "Zane Grey" was sold to Miss Georgia Dairy Co., which placed the series on WAGA, Atlanta; and WMAZ, Macon.

Zion Motors of Salt Lake City bought "The Detectives" for airing on KUTV, and Rodenberg's Super Markets of Charlestown, S.C., bought the skein for a run on WCSC.

"Rifleman" has been sold in eight new markets, bringing total syndication sales to 35 markets.

DICK CLARK SALES

"Dick Clark Radio Show," produced and distributed by Mars Broadcasting, of Stamford, Conn., has been sold to WRGA, Rome, Ga., and WEER, Warrenton, Va.

According to Stanley Kaplan, exec v.p. of Mars, the two-hour show is now being aired in Canada and Puerto Rico, as well as in the U. S.

NBC Int'l in 50G Portugese TV Deal

London, May 28.

NBC International has signed another affiliation deal, this time with Portugese TV which will take two one-hour pubaffair programs for the next year. Setup was clinched at the Cannes fest by Will Roland, a director of NBC International, and Marcello de Morais and Assis de Brito of RTP (Radio-Television of Portugal).

At the same time the Portuguese tv toppers renewed a further year's supply of six hour skeins —"Dr. Kildare," "Dick Powell Theatre," "Jonanza," "Loretta Young Show," and "87th Precinct." Overall the deal is worth around $50,000 to NBC International.

Apparently the Portuguese snapped up the deal because of their satisfaction with a previous NBC documentary, "Letters of Van Gogh." The affiliation contract was preferred because this will enable RTP to receive hot topical programs the same week as they are aired domestically in the States.

At time of writing NBC International execs are in process of tying up a similar affiliation deal with Telefis Eireann, the Irish tv service.

OFF-WEB: GAMBOL OR GAMBLE?

60 Min. Rating Performance

Rebuttal of some station operators to syndicators' contention that prices are being driven down to a non-profit point is that in some key markets in the country, the off-network hourlong series haven't proven themselves on the rating charts. Inherent in the rebuttal is that the decline in prices has been dictated by poor ratings. Los Angeles, according to the April ARB's, is a prime example.

These are the Los Angeles April ARB's cited: "Aquanauts," KTTV, Tuesdays at 8:30 p.m., rating of 1; "Surfside 6," KCOP, Wednesdays at 7 p.m., rating of 3, share of 6; "Cains Hundred," rating of 1, share, 2; "Bronco," KCOP, Fridays at 9 p.m., rating of 1, share 2; "New Breed," KABC, Saturdays at 9:30 p.m., rating 5, share 9. Others failing to achieve a rating of five in the April report include "Adventures in Paradise," "Checkmate," "Thriller," and "Roaring 20's."

In New York, according to the April ARB rating compilation, the situation is brighter, but still nothing to rave about. WNEW-TV, indie which went in heavily for off-network hours, has posted what for it are healthy ARB's on the whole; WPIX and WOR-TV in general haven't fared as well with the same type of product. Here are the April ARB's for WNEW-TV, "Outlaws," 6, share, 12; "Cain's Hundred," 6 rating, 10 share; "87th Precinct," 8 rating, 12 share; "Detectives," 6, share 10; "Bourbon Street Beat," 7 rating, 14 share; ratings which are reflective of the WNEW-TV experience with the hours.

"Maverick" in Chicago drew an April ARB of 6 and a share of 9 on WGN-TV; in the three station market of Boston, WNAC registered a third place rating of 9 and a 20 share for its Monday at 7 p.m. telecast of "Target: The Corrupters;" "Hong Kong" with a 5 rating came in second on WNAC; and "Checkmate" with an 11 rating came in second on WBZ.

According to some station operators, there's been a disenchantment with the rating performances of some hours, and they have more ratings to prove their point.

Policy or No, Station Obliged To Find Time for Political B'casts

Washington, May 28.

Stations will have to give time for political broadcasts even if it is against their general policy, according to the guidelines of an FCC memorandum.

Commission wrote its memo in response to questions raised during hearings of the House Commerce Committee on suspending equal time rules for the 1964 Presidential and vice Presidential candidates.

In a 5-1 decision, FCC said "it would . . . be inconsistent with the public interest if the station, irrespective of the needs and interests of its community, had rerfused to give time to a political contest because of a general policy of never making its facilities available for political broadcasts."

Commission said it's judgment of a station's operation in the public interest would include political broadcasts meeting the needs and interests of its community.

To politick or not to politick will, like other decisions, rest with the "good faith judgment" of a station FCC said. A station will specifically have to decide if a particular campaign warrants coverage in relation to other contests and other pfogramming considerations, FCC said.

Commission said its decision is consistent with statutory language, legislative history and judicial and administrative interpretation of Sec. 315.

But the cited precedents apparently weren't enough for Commissioner Robert E. Lee who dissented from the memo. He said Congress should "clarify its intent" in FCC application of the "fairness doctrine."

Commissioner Rosel Hyde was absent. The memo was favored by Chairman Newton Minow and Commissioners Frederick Ford, Robert Bartley, Kenneth Cox and E. William Henry.

Politico Violation Rap Vs. WHAS-TV

Washington, May 28.

FCC accused WHAS-TV, Louisville, of an extremely serious" violation of political sponsorship identification in Kentucky's red-hot Democratic gubernatorial primary and told the station it is subject to a $1,000 fine.

WHAS-TV was given 30 days in which to answer.

FCC said WHAS-TV permitted one of the two gubernatorial candidates, Edward T. Breathitt, to hide behind the name, "Committee for Good Government," as the spon-

Syndie Sing-a-Long

A syndicated sing-a-long kiddie show titled "Schnitzel House" is being distributed by Ken Israel & Associates, of Pittsburgh.

There are 130 programs in the series, which is produced in color. Length of episodes is four-and-a-half minutes. Gordon Dilworth plays the part of Grandpa Schnitzel.

Georgia B'casters Plan 'Guinea Pig' Test in Com'l Curb

Atlanta, May 28.

Directors of Georgia Association of Broadcasters met Sunday (25) in emergency session to discuss a three-pronged course of action to oppose FCC's recent preliminary decision to limit radio-television advertising.

Presented to the board for study were these three proposals:

1—A court suit using a "guinea pig" station to test FCC's power to invade programming through restrictions on commercials.

2—A special meeting of the Southeast Radio-TV Seminar in Atlanta prior to July 1 as a mass demonstration of broadcasters' feeling on FCC's proposals and to urge broadcasters to oppose the FCC plan.

3—A statewide radio-tv promotion campaign at massing public opinion in favor of free broadcasting.

GAB also sent telegrams to both Georgia senators (Russell and Talmadge) urging them to "investigate the FCC's breach of freedom" and support broadcasters in "thwarting the FCC course of action." GAB termed FCC's action as the most serious threat ever raised against free enterprise and American broadcasting

OF's 'Battleline' Series

Hollywood, May 28.

Production begins immediately on 38 episodes of "Battleline," syndicated series being shot by Sherman Grinberg Productions for Official Films.

It"s a half-hour documentary series. Producer Grinberg is now interviewing researchers, writers, associate producers and other personnel. His hq is at Columbia.

LIMITED NUMBER RIDE GRAVY TRAIN

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

Syndicators, some of the fighting for their lives in the market-place, are bent on clearing the air, as to costs involved in taking an off-network property for the market-to-market route.

Propelling the syndicators is the concept of some station operators that off-networking represents a "gravy train" for the producer-distributors. That "gravy train," if it existed at all, has long passed and the rebuttal of some syndicators is that if prices are driven down further, it will no longer be profitable to operate and off-network product will dry up as did first-run syndication product.

What are the costs in off-networking? For the syndicator, there's the basic initial residual cost of from $3,000 to $4,000 per half-hour episode and from $6,000 to $7,500 for an hour, for two runs. Residual payments can vary from series to series, depending on the guestars and the number in the cast. The talent guild residual formula is 140% of original scale for the first six runs. Non-term players and guestars usually wangle deals above scale, bringing up the residual payment costs of many series.

It's not simply a case of exposing the crying towel. Those syndicators with only off-network properties on top of their selling lists maintain they are operating in the black, and the roster includes such key ones as Warner Bros., Four Star and MCA TV. It's no secret though that these companies, as well as others, are holding product off the market. The word is out that off-networking has become a "tough gamble."

Added to the residual costs are such costs as print, sales, ad-promo-publicity, etc., bringing the break even nut for many off-network hour series to $15,000 per hour and $8,000 per half-hour. That is for the so-called average series, with the range going to highs of more than double that amount for some series. Upshot of all this is that in a market of product plenty, it's the relative few series which will make the profit grade.

Complicating the cost situation for some syndicators are these factors. Some series never made their costs back on the network run. When a producer sells such a series for a syndication whirl, he hopes to make up his network loss via the market by market route. Then, there are the cases of partial ownerships being bought up prior to the market-by-market run. All these considerations are tacked

WBBM-TV Director's $1,100,000 Action Vs. Sahl Tossed Out

Chicago, May 28.

A local tv director's $1,100,000 slander suit against comedian Mort Sahl was dismissed in U.S. District Court here last week on grounds that Sahl's indiscreet remarks about the director were made "in the exercise of comment." Judge Michael Igoe ruled, in effect, that a video direstor "invites the same comment and criticism as does any actor, playwright, author or other person in the creative arts."

Sahl's disparagenent of the talent and ability of WBBM-TV director Phil Ruskin was voiced initially on the conversation show, "At Random," which Ruskin directs. It's understood there had been friction between the two in the control booth just prior to Sahl's appearance on the program last year, and when the comedian went before the cameras he immediately assailed the director. The following evening, during an appearance on a WNBQ interview stanza, Sahl reiterated his estimate of the WBBM-TV director.

Desilu Sales' Whopping $5,000,000 Syndie Gross; O'seas Marts Hot

Hollywood, May 28.

Desilu Sales, syndication arm of Desilu Studios, has grossed approximately $5,000,000 in foreign and domestic sales of its vidfilm product the past year, it was revealed by Richard W. Dinsmore, veepee-sales manager of DS. Dinsmore, before he left Saturday on a four-six weeks global junket, predicted an upswing in sales in the European market in the next year and a "tremendous" growth in the overall foreign market in the next five years.

One interesting and potentially significant development which has occurred recently is the purchase by American sponsors of vidpix for foreign markets, Dinsmore disclosed. While thus far only a "handful" of U. S. bankrollers are buying American telefilms for showings overseas, five to 10 years from now such buying will be "routine," the exec predicted. Move the syndicator, since in this way has obvious built-in benefits for he gets his coin immediately, and without the global problems of rrestrictions, quotas, etc.

More and more foreign markets, even the smaller ones, are buying first-run vidpix, some playing day-and-date with the American networks, and in Canada in ome instances our series are seen their before they are shown in the U. S., the veepee said. It's not a practice the American syndicators are very enthusiastic about, since it obviously hampers the sale of old product, he observed. However, it "does bring in money now on current production, so the studio can figure on extra income from its first-runs," he added.

At Desilu Sales, for example, "The Greatest Show on Earth," which doesn't debut until next fall, has already been sold in Japan, Australia and Manila. "The Lucy Show" is currently playing in 20 countries.

Dinsmore said that India and Africa loom as big potential markets, that Desilu sales in Africa are increasing, particularly in French-speaking nations, and added French-dubbed product is rapidly on the upbeat, with vidfilms dubbed in that lingo not only for Africa, but French Canada, France, Belgium, Luxembourg and Monte Carlo.

Dinsmore said he understands Greece, which has no tv at the present time, plans to build 18 tv stations in the next 12 months.

Another development which bodes well for the European market in the next year is the advent of a new German network, he commented. Opining he expects the next year in Europe to be an "important one" for U. S. syndicators, Dinsmore said peculiar buying habits of some European nations still hamper Americans, but there are signs these habits are in the process of vanishing. He explained in Germany insistence is 26 films of a U. S. series be screened before-

ITC's Five-Year Foreign Gross Hits $26,000,000

Independent Television Corp. has sold "Fireball L5" and "The Saint" in Canada to the CBC, bringing the total of ITC shows sold for Canadian networking this year to seven.

ITC is a subsid of Britain's Associated Television. The American subsid, which handles a good deal of the foreign biz, reports that in five years ITC has grossed $26,000,000 in foreign sales. Foreign sales for the fiscal year ended April 30, 1963 were 40% higher than the preceding year, the company reported.

Other ITC shows sold for networking in Canada include: "Jo Stafford Show," renewal of "Supercar," "Sir Francis Drake," "Tony Hancock Show" and "All Kinds of Music." Also sold to CBC this year were two "Moscow State Circus" specials and three documentaries.

In Japan, ITC is completely sold out on all new properties, including the upcoming "Espionage" series, due to debut on NBC-TV this fall. According to ITC's report, Mexico, Latin and South America are almost completely sold out. Sales made in those areas this year include "Fireball XL5" and "The Saint" in Mexico, Argentina, Uruguay and Venezuela with "Espionage" also sold in Venezuela.

Healthy sales also were reported in markets such as Australia, the Philippines, and Europe.

Tooke, Israel Upped In Realignment at Group W

Under a realignment of top-level posts as Group W, the new designation for the Westinghouse Broadcasting chain, Rolland V. Tooke was named exec v.p. of staff and group operations while Larry H. Israel becomes exec v.p. over station operations. Both are new posts that go into effect July 1.

Tooke was formerly exec v.p. of the chain and Israel was prexy of TVAR, the group's spot sales reps. Company prexy Don McGannon said that the broadening of Group W's activities made it necessary to divide into two operating areas responsibilities under two execs reporting directly to him.

Double Exposure Payoff

WCBS-TV, N.Y., has doubled the rating pull of its "Eye on . . ." pubaffairs series since it decided to double expose the half-hour show last April.

Show, now fronted by Mike Wallace as host-reporter, currently is slotted Sunday afternoons at 4:30 p.m. for its repeat telecast. Initial telecast is Saturdays at 1:30 p.m.

Sets tuned in for the series now range from 240,000 to 410,000, according to ARB. This compares to the 60,000 to 215,000 range which prevailed just prior to the April change, when the "Eye" series was telecast Saturday afternoons only.

ITC Has Yen For Par's Post-'48s

Independent Television Corp., which lost out in its bid for the post-'48 Universal library, has more than a passing fancy to pick up cinematics for tv distribution. ITC, according to an exec, is "interested" in acquiring the Paramount post-'48 library.

Paramount has posted a $25,000,000 price tag on its 200 post-'48's, which date to 1960. Understood one of the difficulties involved in Paramount negotiations is Par's desire for a deal which would yield the motion picture company the Arts is reported close to signing its deal with Universal for that company's 215 post-'48's. Price tag on the Seven Arts-Universal deal is said to be $24,000,000. Paramount and Universal are the two remaining major post-'48 studio libraries still to win tv distribution.

Of the eight stations nominated for this unprecedented honor, four were CBS Owned!
WCBS-TV won it!
Last Sunday, the first Emmy ever awarded by the National Academy to an individual station went to CBS Owned WCBS-TV for "Superfluous People," a searing study of the plight of the community's aged and forsaken citizens.
This full-hour documentary, locally-produced by Channel 2's Department of Public Affairs, has been designated by the Academy as "the outstanding program produced by an individual television station in the United States dealing with a significant issue in the station's community."
WCBS-TV and the other CBS Owned stations express their appreciation to NATAS for this national recognition. Community-minded local programs, like "Superfluous People," are one good reason why each of these stations is the leader in its market.

THE STANLEY BAXTER SHOW
With Stanley Baxter, Joan Sims, Gary Miller, the Springfields, Richard Waring, Una Stubbs, Mary Millar, Victor Duret, Cliff Adams Singers, Harry Rabinowitz orch.
Producer: James Gilbert
45 Mins., Sat., 7:45 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

After a two-year absence in legit and movies, Stanley Baxter returns to tv for a series of three. A Scot, but not aggressively so, Baxter clinched his local fame and extended it south of the border through this medium, and his brand of comedy — observant cameos, guyi the formats of small-screen fashions—packs the kind of sophistication with a ready public amongst addicted viewers.

This initialler, which dispensed with conventional hosting and introductions, belted along in fine style, and producer James Gilbert provided plenty of verve, allowing no time for a mental autopsy over the items. This was essential, for the material was, on the whole, more obvious than the presentation. Baxter's support, too, was way above average for this kind of gagalog, including as it did Joan Sims, one of the sharpest local revue talents, singer Gary Miller, and The Springfields, chart-toppers who gave a limber account of their waxing, "Say I Won't Be There."

Among the more piquant numbers was a dance duo in the British Museum, with Una Stubbs and Victor Duret doing some pseudo-Egyptain stepping. A singing-and-dancing setpiece was made of the old Lizzie Borden ditty about the poppa-chopper. It was, however, the comedy that promised more than it performed. Baxter appeared as a fearful dentist going to a colleague for treatment, and this raised tentative yocks. More successful was his impersonation of the "TW" team, getting the right pitch for David Frost's mooing vowels, and a sketch about a milkman who was exchanging one amorous customer for another also had its point.

Finally, there was a musical sendup, to dotty lyrics, of the Kildare series which seemed to lack the bite to leave an impression although the farcical content was reasonably rich. It was, in fact, a punchy show that was somewhat short on verbal ammunition, but it effectively showcased the caustic talent of Baxter.

ON SAFARI
With Armand and Michaela Denis
Producer: Armand Denis
25 Mins., Wed., 7:30 p.m.
BBC-TV, from Bristol

This world-trekking couple, who have a gift for interpreting natural oddities in suitable terms for the commuter belt, has returned to the schedules with a skein reporting on a ramble through South America. The one caught concerned the Bush Negroes of Dutch Guiana, ex-slaves who had fled from their masters and formed communities in the jungle.

The Denises, sharing the commentary, chatted amiably about their similarities and differences with the tribes of West Africa, displayed their art and drew attention to their passion for cleanliness. The result was chatty and undemanding, and it accompanied film which was content to record rather than illuminate.

The initialler would content the curious idler, and shots of armadilloes and turtles rarely pall. The reactions of the Denises are, in fact, normal, and their geniality does not entirely substitute for the depth of analysis and comment that would make their travels memorable.

EPITAPH FOR A SPY
With Colin Jeavons, Burnell Tucker, Janet McIntyre, Geoffrey Hibbert, Peter Ducrow, John Devaut, Barry Shawzin, Carl Jaffe, Derek Smee, William Fox, Hans Pravda, Henry Oscar, Frederick Jaeger, Sandra Barry, Robert Crewdson
Producer: Dorothea Brooking
Writer: Elaine Morgan
30 Mins., Sun., 5:40 p.m.
BBC-TV, from London

Described by author Eric Ambler as an ironic adventure, his original novel was transformed into a facetious spree by Elaine Morgan, in normal respects an efficient tv scribe. The tale, which was adapted for the small screen in six parts 10 years ago, has been slimmed into a four-part skein. In the process, excitement was diminished and an attempt to substitute teasing fun for tension did not come off.

The egregious plot concerned Joseph Vadassy (Colin Jeavons), a camera maniac on vacation in the South of France with a yen for photographing lizards. But a roll of his film also recorded secret scientific establishments, and got him reported to the local gendarmerie. It was then discovered that his camera had been switched for another, and the police enlisted him to find the owner of the incriminating instrument. This involved Vadassy in capers with the other guests at his hotel, all of them an offbeat bunch, to elicit which one had taken the guilty pictures.

Dorothea Brooking's production was artificial, contriving a forced ambience which added little conviction. The performances, too, lacked a third dimension, and Colin Jeavons strived for titters to creaking effect. Upshot was a mixture of thrills and yocks that were as separate as oil and water.

Foreign TV Followup

Television Playhouse

Mary Peach, whose orchardaceous name has contours to match, returned to tv in Paul Jones' "The Outcasts," having hoisted herself out of the starlet bracket through the movies. But she could not help this "Television Playhouse" segment from Associated-Rediffusion, which made a damp impact. Scripter Jones, who has hitherto displayed a nice line in slick comment about the sexual impasse of marriage, turned in a plot which was slight and needed the light touch. Unfortunately, director James Ormerod seemed to possess little judgement in this kind of frivol, and encouraged his team of thesps to play for easy yocks, instead of letting them arise naturally. The result was a set of artificial grimaces, deserving the occasional guffaw, but over-emphatic for the business in hand.

Desmond (John Bonney) and his wife, Jean (Mary Peach), had taken a house in the commuter belt and deserted their pals in London. They were wearily embedded in a boring and friendless routine, with wails from the baby to punctuate it. An old drinking pal, Brian (Tim Seely), paid a visit and made a play for Jean, who was ready for romantic dalliance. But his real ambition was to get horizontal with the lodger, Lucy (Caroline Mortimer), who was filling in time by having illicit dinners with Desmond, for she was a hungry gal. This frothy quadrille was resolved by the truth coming out, and Jean and Desmond reconciling themselves to making the best of their suburban monotony. The moral was that life has to be lived as a compromise, and those aiming for the passionate heights must settle for the middle of the road.

Even on the premise of the script, which might have been given a more potent ironical treatment, the idea was less effervescent than it should have been. The thesps mugged energetically, with John Bonney as the principal culprit and Miss Peach also being uncertain in her groping for the soufflee touch. Caroline Mortimer, although inexperienced, was okay as the sceptical Lucy, and Tim Seely scored a few points as the wolfish Brian.

Loevinger Hearing June 4

Washington, May 28.

Senate Commerce Commission hearings on the nomination of Lee Loevinger to be a FCC commissioner have been skedded for June 4 at 10 a.m.

Loevinger has been assistant attorney general in charge of the antitrust division. By broadcasters, he is best remembered in that post as an official who said option time violates the antitrust laws.

From Minnesota, he served on that state's supreme court as an appointee of Orville Freeman, then governor and now Secretary of Agriculture.

THE QUIET REVOLUTION

The quiet revolution taking place in the U.S. today is that of organized religion's growing involvement in "real problems in the real world" through a new breed of clergyman who rides the freedom buses to set an example, works actively to improve conditions in the slums, looks after the health and rights of migrant workers, ministers to narcotics addicts and organizes the underprivileged into political parties so that they may have adequate representation. It's a phenomenon that made for a timely and illuminating news special in an atmosphere of the Birmingham race riots and a number of lesser localized social problems lately in the news.

If there is any quarrel with the NBC presentation, it's that it got bogged down toward the end in clerical speechmaking, which had the effect of vitiating the point that it is action and not words that characterizes the new movement in the church. Perhaps this was necessitated by a desire to give, as it were, equal time to all faiths since the newsreel evidence of social activism by men of the cloth tended to favor the Protestant sects.

On the whole, producer-writer Gerald Green and reporter Ray Scherer evidenced a good grasp of their subject, and they put it lucidly into focus. There were a number of articulate explanations for the growing social consciousness of the clergy, among them: "People today want a religion that is specific and applied, one that says what it means and means what it says"; or, "Jesus was crucified because he confronted the social and political problems of his time;" or, "Either the church becomes relevant, or it will be irrelevant to the people."

The new thinking was illustrated by the work of a white Congregationalist minister in East Harlem, a Baptist minister in Arizona, a Presbyterian in the Chicago slums, a rabbi who took part in the freedom rides and a Catholic priest who is a member of the Civil Rights Commission. It was underscored by several of the speeches made at the First National Conference on Religion and Race, a conclave of the three major faiths last January, that affirmed the rights of all men to equal spiritual dignity and the obligations of the church to assume leadership in matters of racial injustice.

It was a good stroke to incorporate statements by one of the new movement's detractors, a Baptist minister who spoke in northern accent. His position was that "liberals were getting the church involved in politics and economics in the name of Jesus Christ, when our basic Christian purpose is evangelism." His stated attitude had the effect of setting the new breed into sharp relief from the old.

The program was a commendable effort, both for the revelation it contained and for its journalistic fairness and restraint.

THE KREMLIN

The deep hues of Russian history, the seeming never ending turbulence of its past, the power thrust of its present, were captured in this hourlong NBC-TV documentary on the Kremlin. In its tinted version it was a dazzler.

What was woven by producer George A. Vicas and his associates was a rich tapestry, with the 65-acre Kremlin compound, serving as history's thread. It was a remarkable 60-minute tour in many respects. First, it opened up the Kremlin walls to millions of western viewers for the first time; second, sight and sound were combined artfully for an ofttime dazzling historical display.

Right down to the final few seconds interest was retained. Following the printed legend at the end, telling of the cooperation of Soviet technicians and other Soviet citizens in the making of the documentary, a voice over explained that the Soviet government took exceptions to the web's handling but that the documentary conformed to the historical facts.

Vicas' production staff, notably camerman J. Baxter Peters and film editor Aram Boyajian, evidenced a knowing hand and a rich imagination in retaining a fluidity to the Kremlin story. Brought into play for the historic montage were the czarist artifacts, frescoes, crowns, old newsreel footage of the Revolution, and other material.

Hour opened with NBC correspondent Frank Bourgholtzer being met at an imposing staircase by a Red Army general for a tour of the Kremlin. As Bourgholtzer went from building to building of the Moscow citadel, the history of the Russian people and their rulers unfolded.

There was the sparse, utilitarian apartment of Lenin, the resplendent rooms of the overthrown monarchies, the beauty of its religious chapels, now museum pieces, the modern Palace of Congresses, the dome under which the Central Committee of the Communist Party meets, and much more. Some of the footage was accompanied by a choral selection, effective, but objected to by the Soviet government. Soviet objection was based on the position that the choral selection could be translated as meaning "long live" the Czars. Whatever the translation, the impression of the program, in its treatment of the Czars, was one of awe. Lenin's apartment was bare indeed compared to the opulence of the Czars and Lenin, unlike the Czars, didn't have any counterpart like the Red Army Chorus.

Fact, though, is that Lenin's successors now occupy the Kremlin and that, too, was very much in evidence in the documentary. The documentary, telecast as it was in the midst of these touchy east-west times had other fascinating footnotes to offer, chief among which is the thread of absolutism marking Russian history. Horo.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Bell & Howell Close-Up

The routine of a real-life cop working in one of New York's roughest neighborhoods provided the ingredients for a solid half-hour documentary entry in this ABC-TV series last Tuesday night (21). The story unfolded through the eyes of a radio-car officer who emerged both as a nice sort of guy and a tower of strength. This policeman's honest dedication to his job and the people he is assigned to safeguard came through with great believability.

The documentary, titled "The 23d Precinct," was sustained by some excellent camerawork by William Hartigan. The camera seemed to be right in the center of the proceedings, including the unsuccessful attempt to resuscitate a suicide and the investigation of a robbery in a tenement flat. An interview with the wife of the policeman, Chris Forster, also was deeply moving. Unfortunately, a half-hour was not sufficient time to explore concretely the relations between the police and the dense Negro and Peurto Rican population in the 23d Precinct. Arthur Holch was producer-writer.

CBS Reports

CBS News managed a reportedly uncensored interview with Soviet physicist Igor Tamm by Marvin Kalb. It took only a half-hour on Wednesday (22) of the usual "CBS Reports" one-hour tv slot. The network says it took producer Arthur Morse 18 months to prepare an interview "without any restrictive conditions" by the Russians.

The result was modest but positive. The seeming honesty of the interview was impressive, but the most impressive thing was the warmth and humanity of the Russian Nobel Prize winner. Among

The TV Academy was remiss. It gave a lot of awards, indeed too many, but not one for Joey Bishop for holding the 15th Annual Emmy telecast together.

The comedian, working as host in Hollywood, was the real entertainment on this program, which began at 10 p.m., N.Y. time, and ended just about 14 minutes short of midnight. Arthur Godfrey was host in N.Y. He was no match for Bishop. Chet Huntley was host in Washington and, unfortunately, his task became confusing since he was also an award winner.

Putting aside the Emmys themselves for a moment, this NBC telecast had some technical miscues. By now, years after transcontinental television was perfected, it should be easy to make cuts between the Coast and N.Y. and Washington without an abundance of misshadings, flip-flops and goofs. However, they happened on Sunday . . . in abundance.

There were plenty of other faults in the presentation, but they become too plentiful, like the awards themselves, to merit repetition.

"I sometimes think," a TV Academy member once submitted, "that the people who vote the Emmy winners don't see half the programs they vote for." Because there are so many awards, based on so many programs, the speaker was probably close to some kind of a truth.

There is an arbitrariness about the awards structure, which none of the perennial attempts at modification has wiped away. That's because the TV Academy, with so many different categories of membership, and so many chapters in so many cities, has so many egos to feed. Unless the organization decides on something really novel or really rash in the awards field, it's not likely modification will improve the memorability of the Emmys. Who remembers any of last year's Emmy winners? And that is a key point of any practical value in an argument of industry awards.

The Academy trustees or whoever delineates the categories insist that one should measure as distinct from each other a lead actor in a running part and a lead actor in single performances. Thus, they have created categories for "outstanding continued performance by an actor in a series," itself a redundancy, and "outstanding single performance by an actor in a leading role." Of course, there are like awards for actresses too. Yet the trustees, or whoever, think nothing of changing the rules for supporting actors and actresses; you can win in this category either by having done a one-shot job or by having appeared weekly.

Another puzzlement: The Academy trustees decided to give a special citation to AT&T for making Telstar, yet the members of the organization did not concur, since there were no nominations for "outstanding electronic engineering achievement." Perhaps none was nominated because most of the Academy members aren't closely familiar with engineering accomplishment.

A welcome citation was given posthumously to Dick Powell. Another by the trustees of the Academy was given to President Kennedy for his "willingness" to permit tv coverage of his activities, which marked another page in the already overwritten volume of tv love poems to the President.

Brandeis Confab Throws Spotlight On Educ'l TV Role

Boston, May 28.

Educational tv is big biz and costly; the FCC is planning an educational tv net; and commercial tv interests have an obligation in helping to bring it about. These were the highlights of Brandeis U. confab concluded Friday (24).

To expand educational tv from 80 to 320 stations and improve quality of programming would take a maximum of $147,900,000, it was revealed as 65 media experts attending the four-day sessions dug into money matters after two days of discussing education's role in American society.

A four-man panel at Themis House, Brandeis confab center in Weston, came up with the estimate Friday (24). Several participants in the conference said total cost figure was probably low. Estimates given the group by Prof. Ralph Garry of BU were divided into five categories:

1. An annual capital investment over the next 10 years of $1,500,000, a total of $15,000,000 by 1973. The figure assumes the construction of 240 additional UHF and VHF stations at an average cost of $300,000 excluding land, plus replacement of existing capital investments.

2. Annual operation and administration costs totaling $50,000,000 or $5,000,000 a year. This includes engineering, technical and administrative costs exclusive of program costs.

3. $12,000,000 for the production of instructional tv programs, those for use in school classrooms. The total figure assumes national and regional production and distribution of one-fifth to one-half of all tv programs broadcast.

4. A figure of $30,000,000 for the operation and administration of a national educational tv net, eight hours of programming daily, exclusive of program costs.

5. General ed programs programs produced or acquired by national nets for local programming, $40,000,000.

This money is expected to be provided primarily from the same sources now supporting ed tv operations, public schools, boards and state governments for operating costs and programming with foundation assistance for the establishment of stations in some instances.

In addtion the federal government has pledged $30,000,000 educational tv construction grants, the funds divided among the 50 states according to populations and land area, and requiring matching state or local funds.

The Brandeis confab — held in conjunction with the American Academy of Arts and Sciences under an Office of Education grant, heard a FCC commissioner pledge an ed tv net, while another commissioner pointed to commercial tv interests obligation in making it happen.

Commissioner Frederick Ford announced the FCC's intention of an educational network, and pointed out that educators preparing projects for ed tv should remember the need for maintaining a theme of international cooperation. Programs, he said, should be planned with the aim of aiding underdeveloped nations. The FCC now has requests for consideration for 900 ed channels, he said, and the agency is planning creation of an ed tv net system.

FCC commissioner Kenneth Fox told the group that commercial tv has an obligation to educational tv, and declared that it hardly seemed necessary to point it out, since commercial stations have grown great willingness to help develop ed tv.

Salant: Congress Must Get Hep To Electronic Age

Chicago, May 28.

"It is about time that Congress —in its own self-interest and in the interest of the people it represents—moved into the electronic age. It's the public's business, after all, what goes on in the House of Representatives."

The statement is Dick Salant's, prexy of the CBS News Division, who rebuked the U.S. House in an address here last week for operating against the public interest in its prohibition of tv and radio equipment at the proceedings. He called the legislative body "an anachronism" in an age when public participation is being stimulated through the firsthand look and listen afforded by tv and radio, as evidenced in the space shots, the Presidential press conferences, and in the broadcast coverage of the U.N.

"Congress itself can experience real progress," he said, "if the people are brought into the proceedings." Salant told the Chicago Broadcast Advertising Club that radio-tv access to the House was an issue for the broadcast trade to rally to, and one by which they might strike a blow for the processes of government, for the American people and for themselves as an industry.

He dismissed the conventional objections to broadcast entry into the legislature as pure nonsense, refuting the argument about the cumbersome equipment and the distraction of lights on the grounds that the latest equipment is portable, noiseless and operable with available light. As to the objection that legislator's might ham it up before the cameras, he expressed doubt that they would to any significant degree and added that if they did the public would not be fooled. "The public would ultimately respond with its own form of capital punishment, which will be to turn the man out of office," Salant said.

He noted that broadcasting's coverage of Senate committee proceedings has gone well and without exhibitionism, and he pointed out that there has been no disruption of royal weddings, chirch ceremonies or Presidential press conferences when broadcasting was admitted. Salant stated that there has been more interest in the United Nations than in Congress (as reflected by citizens organizations) because of the tv and radio coverage.

The issue, he said, is not that it is radio-tv's "right" to get into public proceedings, but rather that it's the right and the need of the American people to be informed.

Attorney Sues Ed Lamb For $1,000,000 Claiming Libel and Unpaid Fees

Toledo, May 28.

Edward Lamb, Toledo lawyer, industrialist, newspaper publisher, and radio-tv station operator, is the defendant in a second suit filed by Russell Morton Brown, Washington, D.C., attorney, who is seeking $1,000,000 in the U.S. District Court of the District of Columbia. Brown allegedly represented Lamb during FCC investigation in the mid-1950's of charges that the Toledan had been guilty of Communist affiliations. Brown said he was a defense attorney in a case before the FCC working with J. Howard McGrath, former attorney general in the Truman administration.

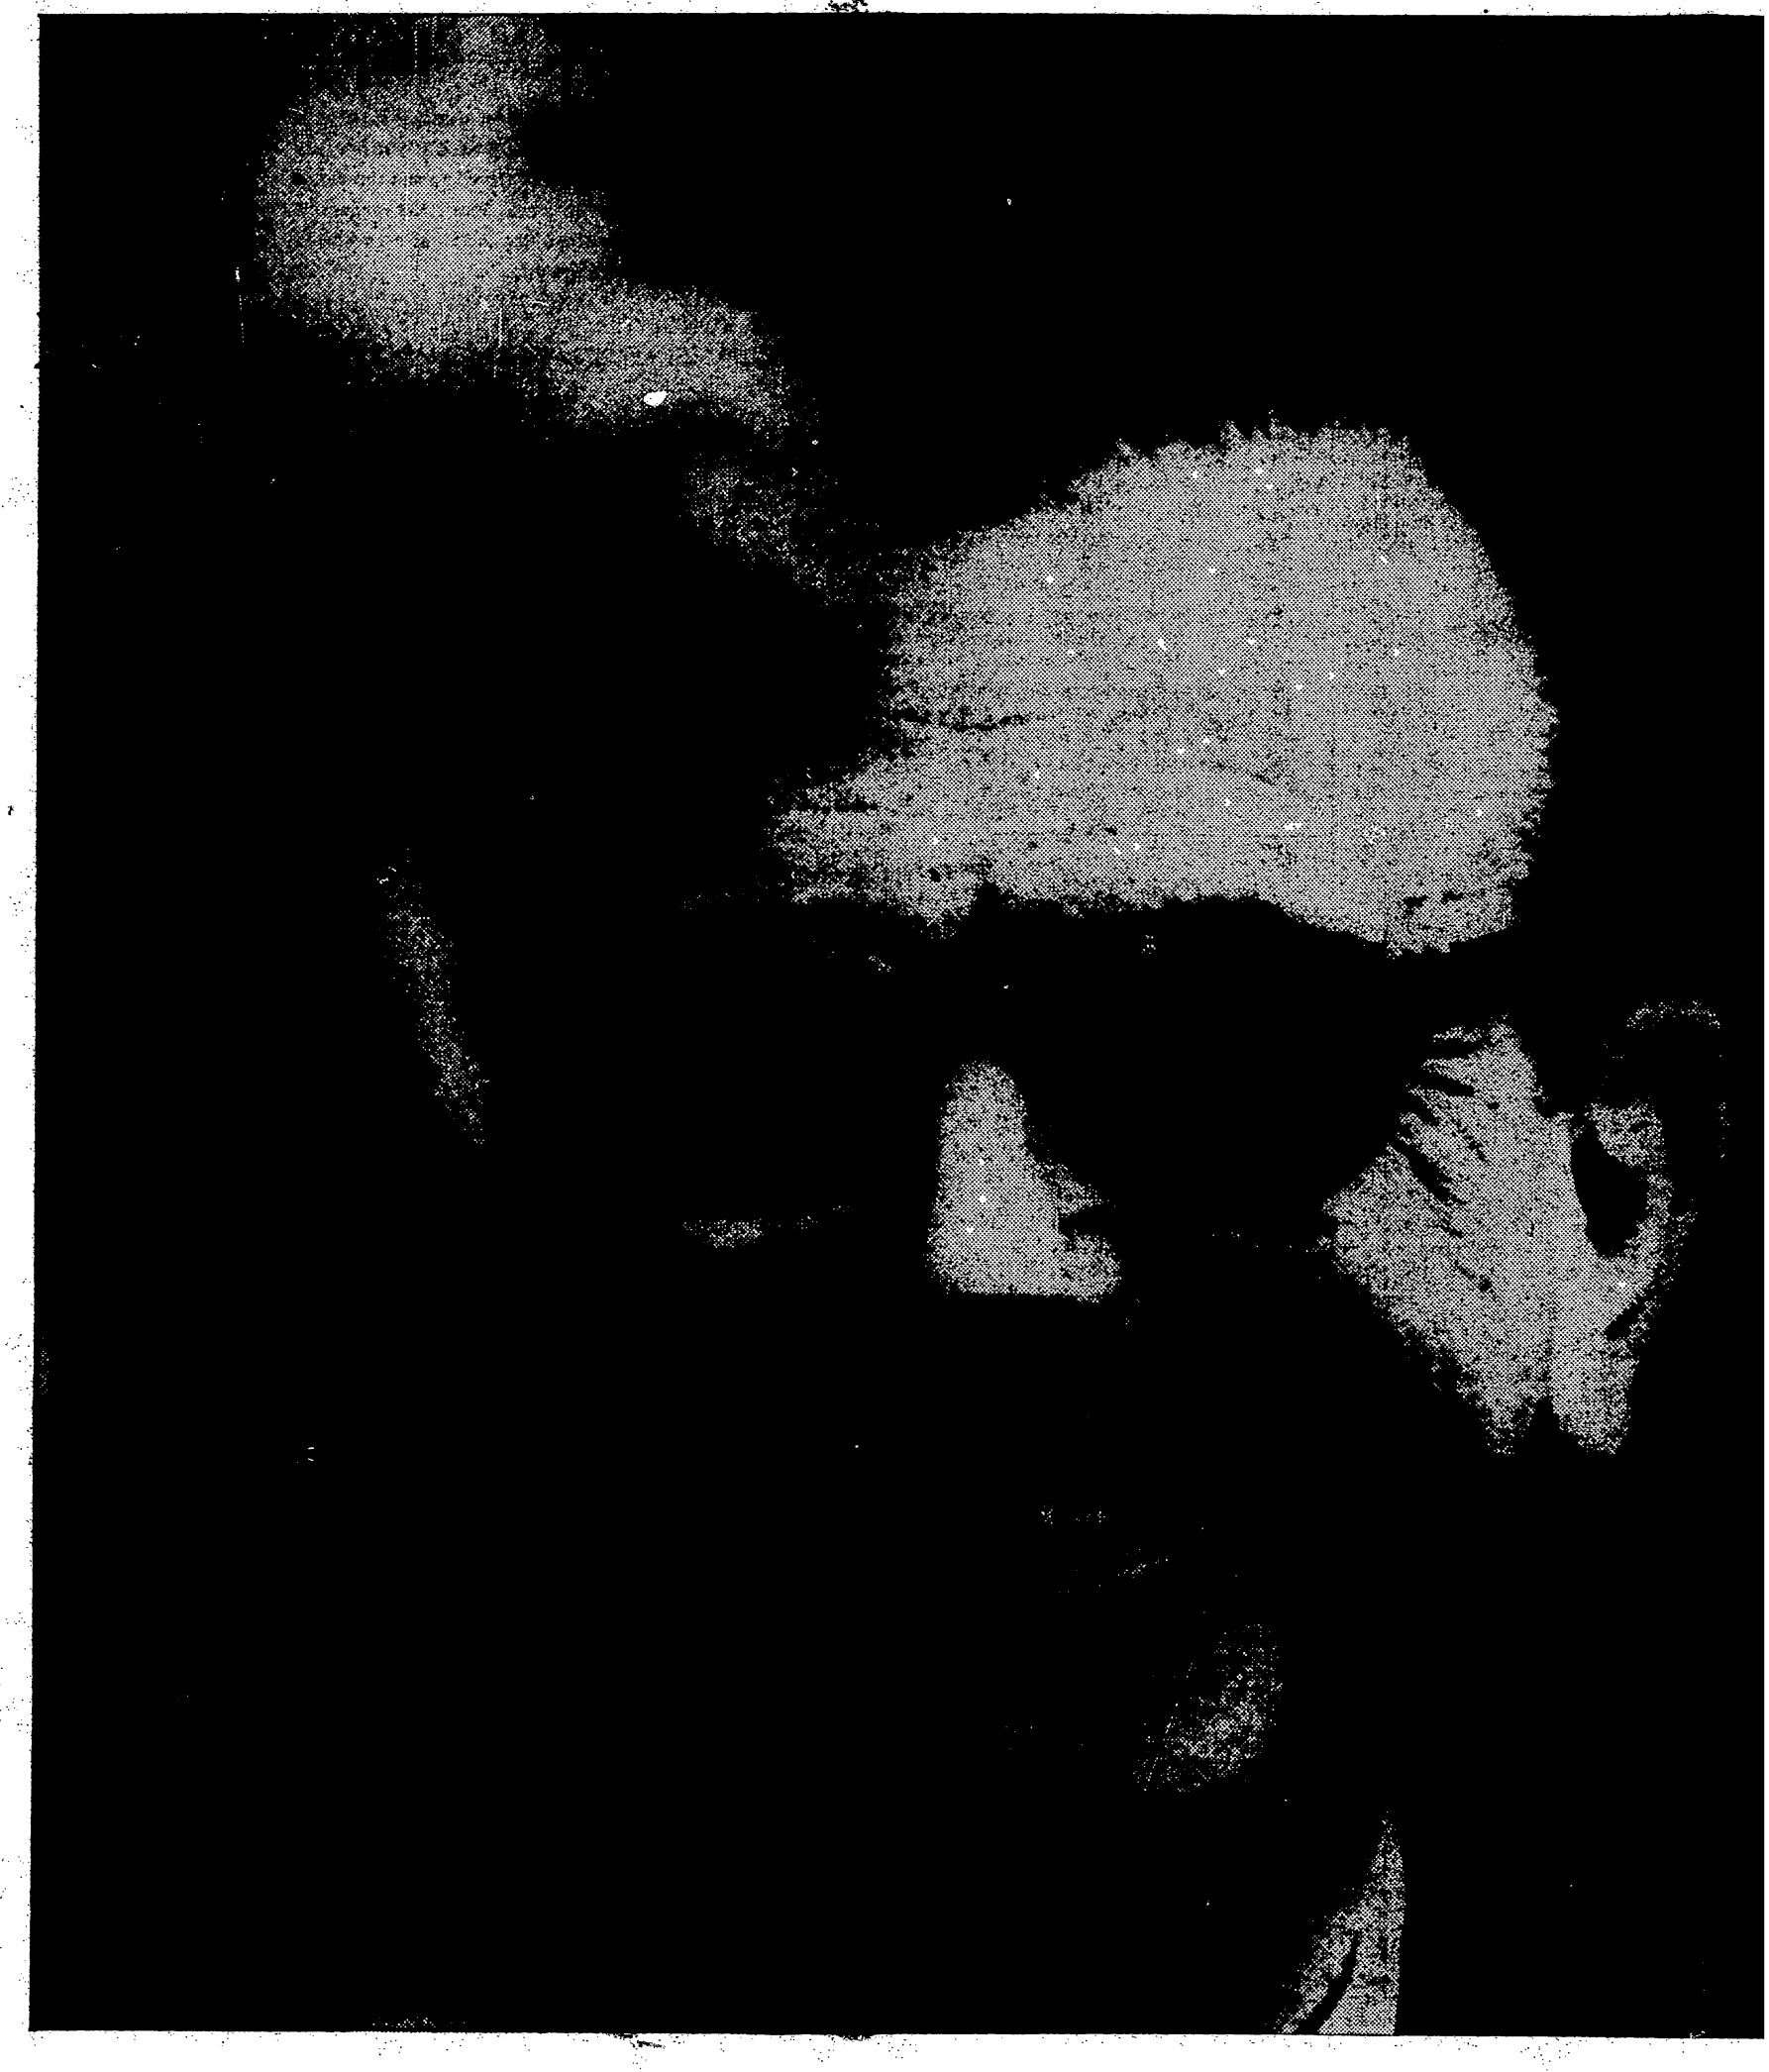
Lamb's recently published autobiography, "No Lamb for Slaughter" allegedly libels Brown, according to the suit, in which the attorney seeks $500,000 on this count, and also seeks $500,000 which he contends is due him for his services in the FCC hearings from 1954 through 1957.

OBOLER'S 'TWILIGHT' SEG

Hollywood, May 28.

Arch Oboler, who already has spread his wings in radio and motion pictures, makes his tv bow with an original teleplay for next season's "Twilight Zone" series, produced by Cayuga Productions.

Seg is tabbed "What the Devil?" Bert Granet is exec producer.



The Clock and Mr. Paar

It was a question you heard whispered ominously last summer all the way from Madison Avenue to Madison, Wisconsin: "Will a prime-time show mean a less informal Jack Paar?"

Then along came the September premiere of Jack's Friday-night series, and all speculation stopped at once. Obviously, Paar's unstuffiness and irreverence were delightfully intact.

They've remained so all season long. And no one doubts they'll be otherwise in the Fall when the full-hour color show begins its second year—as part of NBC-TV's '63-'64 lineup. For in a world that often equates slickness with talent, Jack and his "gemutlich" guests insist on being themselves.

On the current series, it's seemed the most natural thing in the world for Richard Nixon to play a piano solo; for Nat (King) Cole to chat about a recent trip to the Orient; for Liberace to launch into a spirited demonstration of the twist.

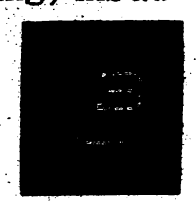
Can there be anything more free-wheeling than an agenda that ranges from the far-out flippancies of the "Beyond the Fringe" cast to the wonderfully unsophisticated home movies of Jack and family touring the Holy Land?

During his approaching Summer vacation Paar and camera will be visiting such areas as Africa, Hawaii and Tahiti. So this Fall, Paar viewers will not be too surprised if they see films covering everything from Dr. Schweitzer's feelings about Raymond Massey to a newly-discovered galley-menu (soaking wet) from HMS Bounty.

But best of all, there'll be Jack himself on stage—tossing off one-liners, swapping anecdotes with guests, and ribbing (but never deceiving) his audiences. You know something? We don't think the fellow realizes he's on prime-time. And you know something else? We're not going to tell him.



Look to NBC for the best combination of news, information and entertainment.

VARIETY-ARB SYNDICATION CHART

VARIETY's weekly tabulation based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau, highlights the top 10 network shows on a local level and offers a rating study of the top 10 syndicated shows in the same particular markets. This week six different markets are covered.

Both the network and syndication study features the total area homes reached and the metro area ratings on each show. The total area homes reached reflects the audiences on the basis of the total market area examined. The metro area ratings are based on the metropolitan markets within the total area examined. Top 10 shows, both network and syndicated, are listed on the basis of their showing in the total area homes barometer.

Various branches of the industry, ranging from media buyers to local stations to syndicators will find the charts valuable.

Over the course of a year, ARB will tabulate a minimum of 247 markets. The results of that tabulation will be found weekly in VARIETY Coupled with the rating performance of the top 10 network shows, on the local level, the VARIETY-ARB charts are designed to reflect the rating tastes of virtually every market in the U.S.

The Burden of Responsible Programming

It seems just about unanimous now. ■ A month ago, a distinguished panel of opinion leaders and critics singled out NBC for numerous and significant Peabody Awards. Previously, the nation's viewers selected a wide range of NBC programs and personalities as their favorites in the TV Guide Awards. ■ And just a few days ago, our colleagues in the television industry presented us with a dazzling array of Emmy Awards—headlined by the naming of "The Tunnel" as "The Program of the Year." "The Tunnel" was also honored as the best documentary, and NBC News correspondent Piers Anderton received the award for the best international reporting for his work on that program. We also want to add our appreciation for the other NBC Emmy winners: Shirley Booth of "Hazel"; Trevor Howard for his performance in "The Invincible Mr. Disraeli" (O. Tamburri won an award for camera work in the same program); Robert Russell Bennett for his original music in Project 20's "He Is Risen"; the "Huntley-Brinkley Report" and "David Brinkley's Journal"; "Walt Disney's Wonderful World of Color" (honored for the series itself, as well as the art direction by Carroll Clark and Marvin Davis); "The Andy Williams Show"; and a Trustees' Award to the late Dick Powell. ■ NBC's winners this year cover the complete broadcast spectrum, from on-the-spot reporting of great events to unalloyed entertainment. In all, they typify the diverse programming of the entire NBC schedule.

work sales department, on short notice, came up with RCA Whirlpool to underwrite the rest. (Except for sharing time with parent RCA on the Walt Disney series, Whirlpool has otherwise not been significantly represented in network tv this season.)

Cooper's press conference, telecast as a special on Sunday (19) from 5-6 p.m., found a spur-of-the-moment taker in Kemper Insurance, which bought the whole show. And finally, the network sales boys turned up a half dozen participating sponsors for the astronaut's reception and parade in New York last Wednesday (22) on less than two days' notice.

Restricting the blurbs to no more than 12 for the four hour event so as not to over-commercialize, NBC-TV pulled Brown & Williamson out of the hat for three spots, Armour for three, Kimberly-Clark for a pair, General Mills for two (one out of New York and one out of Chi) and one minute each from Borden and American Cyanamid. It was a banner week for the web's central division sales office, since virtually all of the quick biz came out of Chi. Whirlpool and Kemper, for instance, and 10 of the 12 minute spots.

operators in California agreed to carry the Birch billboard.

Unlike in the east, where billboards are mostly seen bordering the highways, outdoor advertising is most prominent in the key cities on the Coast. That, Barrett explained, is due to the fact that while the eastern cities obscure billboards by the height of the buildings, the horizontal layout of the Coast cities give special prominence to outdoor signs. The climatic conditions on the Coast, moreover, make outdoor advertising an all-year round buy on the Coast.

hand, and then perhaps six will be bought. But more and more sales have been made recently on the basis of pilots, in Germany, France and Italy, he said, and prices are on the rise, too.

Just about everywhere the foreign market is "improving," he noted. The one big exception is Latin America—Mexico excepted. In a continent which, ironically, has shown a great liking for U. S. vidfilms, political instability and financial conditions have combined to create conditions whch made it very difficult for Americans to get their money for their product. "The money situation is unbelievable. They don't have it. They're broke," he said. This is particularly true of two of the largest nations, Brazil and Argentina. Desilu is receiving its coin, but slowly—50-75% slower than it should be, the exec said. Desilu Sales is not selling any of this year's product in that market as a result. "We don't want to invest in dubbing until we are assured of a cash flow," he explained.

On his globe-trotting mission, Dinsmorer will visit with Desilu reps around the world, also with tv execs in the various countries. He will go to England, France, Germany, Italy, Greece, Lebanon, perhaps Egypt, Portugal, Spain and Iran, thence to Bangkok, Singapore, Australia, Manila and Honolulu, the Scandinavian countries, Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg are also on his agenda. He is bypassing Japan, one of the better foreign markets, because Desilu is sold out there.

work official contrasts the Minow in-&-out to the personal principles of J. Edgar Hoover, who is reported to have declined highly lucrative top management private business proposals many, many times. If the FBI were run by young men leapfrogging into top paying jobs each two years, its performance, it's argued, would fall far short of the high standards it consistently maintains.

What the people and the industry now need, it's held, is a young J. Edgar Hoover who, by putting service above self, can bring true dedication and basic stability to the Commission and tv's program of growth and improvement.

Thus, many who now recognize that perhaps even more needs to be done to improve television than was apparent two years ago, are hopeful that President Kennedy has selected in Henry a man who can do half as much to improve tv as Minow has done to improve himself in the past two years.

onto the series from the day one in syndication, monies which must be returned.

One syndicator said it was a good rule of thumb for his company that no profit is realized in an off-network hour series until more than a $1,000,000 is grossed throughout the country. Series in question is one of those quality ones which had a healthy network run, coming into the syndie market with years of episodes. In another case, one involving buyouts of production partners prior to the realese of the series in syndication, the break-even point was put much higher.

In the midst of this cost situation, prices have taken a drop. A good hourlong series in N.Y. at one time commanded in the neighborhood of $3,200 to $4,000. Los Angeles, $2,500; and Chicago, $2,000. Prices currently are said to be a comparative shadow of what was secured in the past. Some syndicators say they're walking away from deals; there's no meeting ground, they aver.

NBC-Philco: Nothing to Do But Wait for Rebuttal and Decision

Washington, May 28.

FCC Examiner James Cunningham has finally closed the record on the NBC-Philco case and promisees a decision before years' end.

Cunningham shuttered the case involving Philadelphia's Channel 3 last week after a final flurry of legal maneuvering that one observer categorized as "like the last minutes of the Harvard-Yale game when they send everybody in to earn his letter.

Proposed findings are to be filed by both sides July 23 and rebuttal replies a month later. The Broadcast Bureau has an August deadline for its two cents.

Whereupon Cunningham will retire to prepare an initial decision which he said he would try to unveil by the end of 1963.

At issue is whether NBC's license to operate its o&o WRCV-AM-TV is renewed or the nod goes to Philco which is challenging the renewal. NBC has more than an ordinary interest in renewal since it has to jettison the station by June, 1964, under a Justice Department order and figures to comply by swapping it for RKO General's WNAC-AM-TV and WRKO-FM in Boston.

WINN to CBS

Louisville, May 28.

WINN radio will become the CBS radio network basic outlet in Louisville under terms of contracts signed in New York last week. CBS spokesmen said the contracts were signed by Claude Sullivan, WINN v.p. and general manager and William A. Schudt, Jr. CBS v.p. for radio affiliate relations. No date for the contracts to go into effect was given.

WINN would replace WKYW as the CBS outlet in Louisville. WHAS radio was for many years the local radio outlet in Louisville, prior to the switch to WKYW.

Other grants were made to colleges and college associations.

WCBS-TV Pickup On 'Antony & Cleopatra'

Shakespeare in the park will be seen again on tv in N.Y. metropolitan area, when WCBS-TV telecasts the season's opening "Antony and Cleopatra" play from Central Park's Delacorte Theatre.

The Joseph Papp production, tentatively slated for telecasting June 20, will star Colleen Dewhurst and Michael Higgins. Again it will be a two-and-a-half hour telecast. First engagement, set by WCBS-TV's Ned Cramer, was last year's rendition of "Merchant of Venice."

Variety-AKB's weekly chart offers a day-by-day analysis of the top feature evening slots in a particular market. On Saturdays and Sundays, daytime feature slots complete with nighttime pix periods for designation as the top feature slot of the day. The analysis is confined to the top rated feature slots in the ARB measured period, broken down by days in the week. The ARB measured period usually covers three or four weeks. Other data such as the time slot and average share of audience is furnished. Top competition and competitive ratings also are highlighted.

Collins Rating Plan should do the audit, rather than NAB personnel. Collins said all this is still under consideration and made no commitment either way on either point.)

If a service fails to meet the minimum standards, the Council will be empowered to require remedial action and will have authority to rescind the service's accreditation.

(3) NAB's Research Committee will initiate immediately a comprehensive and continuing program of research into measurement methodologies, their adequacy and improvement. Research will be broken into four four areas, radio and television separately, with national and local measurements of each. Special attention will be given to the old dilemma of some kind of yardstick for auto radio and transistor listenihg.

Chairman Harris told Collins that his plan has a very significant omission. "Don't you plan anything for the proper use of ratings?" Harris asked. Collins said he didn't think evaluation of how ratings should be used is a proper area for NAB.

Collins also levelled one sharp criticism at the networks.

"The research people of the networks," Collins commented in an ad lib, "woefully failed to provide the industry with the leadership which would have prevented what this committee has disclosed."

Backing the NAB industry regulation plan to the hilt as he sat on the witness stand with Collins was Donald H. McGannon, prez of Westinghouse Broadcasting and chairman of NAB's Research Committee. McGannon has worked closely with Collins and other industry leaders in hammering out an industry plan which would take off the federal heat in the ratings area. McGannon drew compliments from subcommittee members for his leadership in the effort.

Hagerty Vs. Lang

after leaving CBS, a string of CBS news personnel also made the same move. Ron Cochran was hired to become the anchor man on the early evening report; Howard K. Smith joined the web as a commentator; and Bob Quinn became exec producer of all the news shows. Other CBS staffers who moved over included producers Bill Kobin and Bill Seaman and graphic arts director Benny Blank.

Lang said that he had grown tired running an obstacle race at ABC in the last couple of months. Disputes with Hagerty and others involved a whole range of problems, including the number and time-slotting the documentary specials next season and the retention of the Sunday at 10:30 p.m. half-hour segment for the news department. At one stage in the running debate, Lang reportedly submitted one of his prior resignations with a statement: "I refuse to be a vice-president of nothing."

Lang reached the pinnacle of his power about six months ago when the ABC news department was overhauled and he was put in charge of operations while Hagerty was believed to have been "kicked upstairs," retaining his title as news chief and policy formulator. It has been during this half-year that the most sweeping changes were made in the web's news operation. Chief among these was the hiring of Murphy Martin for the 11 p.m. news show and the playing down of some of correspondents hired by Hagerty.

In this respect, the Lang-Hagerty dispute became acute over the role to be played by William Lawrence, the former N.Y. Times Washington correspondent whom Hagerty hired at a salary plus fees of over $40,000 yearly. In recent months, Lawrence has all but disappeared from the ABC-TV nighttime news shows, reflecting Lang's authority in the news operation.

Even though Lang has departed, it's expected that the web's news operation will continue along his guidelines. That is indicated by the fact that Quinn has been appointed by Hagerty to continue as exec producer with the additional title of general operations manager. The vote of confidence in Quinn allayed widespread apprehension among the news staffers that another shakeup was to be expected in the aftermath of Lang's departure.

Stephen C. Riddleberger, a long-time exec with ABC in various capacities, moved over from his prexyship of the ABC radio o&o's to become v.p. and general manager of ABC's news department. This is the job roughly equivalent to that held by Lang and puts Riddleberger second in command to Hagerty.

Lang is now considering offers from a couple of advertising agencies, but may also wind up as a television personality. He auditioned for a CBS-TV show several years ago, but at that time decided to remain with his exec post.

other things, his English was comprehensible, fluid and grammatically impeccable, or nearly so. The universality of his concern was noticeable. Jackie Gleason

Jackie Gleason is turning into a king size Ed Sullivan once a year with the presentation of regulars on his show in spots of their own. It's an unusual layout inasmuch as those getting their innings are either performers with small parts or are in the non-performing sections. It added up to an entertaining session notably because of the amateur spirit that pervades. The viewer is sort of led not to expect much, and he gets more than anticipated.

There were, however, some worthy efforts from the Gleason stable. For example, Hank Ladd who was a straightman for Bert Wheeler, gave a creditable monolog, Phil Bruns did a good pantomime of a flight to Mars, and Barney Martin conducted a bedlam-like scene in a wild Coney Island bit. Another professionally performed sequence was by Peter Gladke, who used to dance on the nitery circuits, but is now choreographic assistant to June Taylor, gave an excellent impression of a song-and-dance man.

A notable assist was by the Max Kaminsky jazz group, and there was Alice Ghostley to contribute a pair of comedy tunes. Helen Curtis, a plump singer, knocked off "All of Me" and the bill was completed by pint-sized Charley Bolender in "Look-a-Me," midget Stormy Bergh who sang "Louise" and writer Snag Werris who did okay in patter and a performance of a cut rope trick.

In the U.S., the television picture contains 525 lines, while in Germany, Italy, Spain and several other European lands the picture has 625 lines. The British television, now going with 405 lines, is converting to the 625, while the French picture uses 819 lines.

The increasing standardization throughout Europe, however, makes reception easier.

British ATV's 'Death By Tax'

silent in the two days immediately after his barrage, the London Daily Express jumped in quickly.

Splashed in heavy black type slap down the middle of its editorial page accompanied by a picture of Collins and a lampooning cartoon by its politico-satirist Cummings of the ITV "elephant" screaming "Help! I'm being threatened!" by an umbrella-wielding "mouse" tagged "Government ITV tax," was an embarrassingly direct offer.

Daily Express Challenge

". . . the Express is prepared to take Mr. Collins at his word," ran the piece. "We are prepared to put him out of his misery with this simple proposition — Hand over your company to the Daily Express, Mr. Collins! For the Daily Express is prepared to buy and run the ATV company at the level of profit that would follow the imposition of the new tax. In any competitive field such a level of profit would be considered a splendid investment. Of course the Daily Express has no ambition to become involved in television. It is the job of the television companies to run their own services properly. But if Mr. Collins says that he cannot carry on when his profits are clipped by the government, the Daily Express is willing to do so. And just consider what a wonderful boon this would be for the viewers."

The staunchly anti-indie tv, and virulent pro-Empire Daily Express explaining that it was satisfied with "small profit and big service to the public," then went on with this pledge: "Express-ATV would bar all canned products from America. There would be no more endless hours of imported film. Only the very finest programs that British artists and talent can provide. Plus, of course, the pick of Commonwealth entertainment. So what is your answer, Mr. Collins? Perhaps you should first have a word with your chairman, Sir Robert Renwick. He is an outstanding figure in commercial tv, fairminded and enlightened. The Daily Express would be happy to keep him as its chairman of ATV."

For two days there was hedging silence from the ATV h.q. Gradually the larger regionals decided that perhaps they ought not to stay silent in case they were misunderstood and Television Wales and West, Scottish and Anglia TV all gave indications that they had every intention of reapplying for their franchises come renewal time next spring. Said TWW chairman Lord Derby: "It has been apparent that ITV's profits are on the decline and with ever increasing costs this trend may well continue in the future. Moreover, there can be no doubt that competition from the second BBC service will prove a great challenge. To compete with this all ITV companies will have to maintain a very high standard of programs. It's to be hoped that any new levy will not have a detrimental effect on this policy."

And then late on Thursday ATV chairman Sir Robert qRenwick broke the silence with a statement which did not shy from straightening the record so far as Collins' histrionics of the week's start were concerned.

"The levy on turnover is gravely damaging to independent tv," it said. "Moreover the burden of the levy does not fall evenly on all program contractors. ATV—with its divided working between London and the Midlands and its consequently doubled overheads—is worst hit than any other contractor.

"The concessions that the Postmaster General has made do not materially improve ATV's position. But I am confident that the government could, and will devise a form of equitable taxation to bridge the gap before the second independent service is introduced.

"I still trust that when the financial terms of the tv Bill are finally presented it will be financially possible for all program contractors to continue in business. As a temporary measure a tax on profits would appear to be the only fair and practicable method."

So within five days of the Collins eruption the dust seemed to be settling on a scene pretty much as before: indie operators hoping for the best but prepared to suffer on through the worst the taxman could devise.

ing days and studied 342 specific one-minute commercials. We made over 20,000 dialings to designated homes and completed over 11,000 actual interviews."

Concluding, Gerhold declared, "It is unlikely, it seems to us, that the broadcasting industry, or the ratings services, will lead us from the ratings figures that are big and easy to make and familiar to use, to studies that seemingly reduce the dimensions of advertising . . . How much help we are likely to get from the Federals is suggested by the proposed order from the FTC that Nielsen divest itself of half of its broadcast clients. Their next step, I've been told, is to move to improve horse racing by tying together the two left legs of all the fastest horses." Any action to better research, he said, "We are going to have to do ourselves."

BIRMINGHAM SPECIAL
With Leon Lewis, Herb Norman, Hal Jackson
60 Mins.; Thurs., (23) 2 p. m.; 11 p.m
WWRL, N.Y.

History down south is moving so fast that tnis documentary was retailing ancient history about the Birmingham crisis. In focus on this hourlong report was the crisis that followed the bombing of the Negro residences as a climax to the non-violence demonstrations that finally brought Birmingham to its knees. Since that time, several events of paramount importance, such as the court order to reinstate the expelled school children, have intervened.

Oriented towards Negro audiences, this show served to arouse the legitimate indignation of the Negro people over the Birmingham events. Interviews with Negro leaders in that city revealed the great faith and heroism that is motivating the integration movement.

Unfortunately, the quality of the sound on the interviews was very poor. Equally poor was the commentary by Leon Lewis and Herb Norman. They furnished no insight into the events and even beclouded the issues with their attempts to over-dramatize what is already a dramatic enough conflict. Their insistence that Birmingham was "a turning point" in American race relations was rejected by Roy Wilkins, of the NAACP, who gave a much more measured estimate of the meaning Birmingham.

Especially because WWRL serves the Negro community, it was important to give a balanced picture of Birmingham. The minimization in this show of the fact the Negroes have received moral and financial support from many white leaders and organizations only played into the hands of the nationalist demagogs among the Negro people.

Radio Followup Comment

Open Mind (Montreal)

Station CKGM, one of the younger radio outlets, has tried since kick-off time to present attention-getting programs, even if the format is controversial and sometimes even irritating.

One of these programs is "Open Mind," a title which was either borrowed, or strayed by itself, from below the border. "Mind" has been on the air for a long time, but recently got a new moderator in the person of Tom Cherrington, succeeding George Devies.

Cherrington, on his part, is personable and rare is the time when he even raises his voice, no matter how provocative the caller, and there's plenty of them.

He's on the air from 9 to midnight, five-a-week, which is a chore on any radio outlet, let alone a spot like Montreal where the English-French and Canadian-U.S. issues are so touchy and explosive.

Performance-wise, Cherrington is fine, in his patience with the prejudiced and the provoked, and it should be emphasized that the taping of calls with a five-second differential between the time of conversation and actual airing, is an excellent safety gimmick to avoid what isn't suitable for the air, even for adult, evening listening.

What Cherrington should watch is not to get too deep into subjects which the anti-Negro bigots, for example, love to spread as far as possible. On one show, the biology and personal hygiene of the non-white became a tasteless discussion without end.

He might also be wise to bone up on matters of the day, since he gets all kinds of calls about current happenings, and all material is nicely available in the papers. It's only a matter of reading and keeping on top of the news.

It's an interesting show, even if bitterly opposed by many persons who are against providing air time for every nut and bigot who calls.

head of CBS News' Washington bureau to the newly-created post of chief European correspondent. Schoenbrun, once close to the Salant command, was brought into Washington when Smith exited the post in a policy hassle over editorializing.

Ever since Schoenbrun left his Paris post to move to Washington and then back to Europe, there have been recurring battles between Schoenbrun and the brass. Schoenbrun, a strong personality, obviously isn't close to the Salant command, although still under contract. How far away he is may be spelled out in a few days. It would be a surprise if there's sufficient resilience in the Schoenbrun-Salant relationship for the band to snap back into place.

WIIC still needs good film for weekend showings and will bid for the block but there is none of the feverish bidding that goes on in markets where films are used on more than two stations for the period after the 11 p.m. news.

When bidding goes on, the station often has to pay a lot more than would be necessary. So the costs must go up and the stations look around for someone to pick up the tab or look within their own structure to see where the money can be made available. One of these days, it is feared, they will be shaking the little tin box and there won't be a sound.

In the case of Albee, his agent William Morkes, says that he's merely tendered "Zoo Story" and another legit one-acter for adaptation.

Odets and actor Boone have also exacted promises for material from some of the biggest names in the music biz. Sammy Cahn and Jimmy Van Heusen, Johnny Green, Henry Mancini and Maurice ("Lawrence of Arabia") Jaare are said to be supplying original music for the series, which Boone and Odets are doing in partnership with Goodson-Todman.

FCC has cleared away only a weed or two from the NBC-Philco underbrush by denying Philco's appeal of an examiner's order refusing it a subpoena.

The commission upheld Examiner James Cunningham's quashing of the Philco subpoena in November, 1962. Philco appealed the quashing.

Philco had sought to command 64 documents relating to RCA patent activities. Cunningham said it was a "fishing expedition."

The complex case, now before Cunningham for decision, involves renewal of NBC's license for its o. & o. WRCV-TV in Philadelphia. Philco wants the station, too.

The largest number of television, radio and newspaper correspondents ever to converge on Ottawa turned up to cover the NATO spring ministerial conference May 22 to 24. Nearly 500 were officially accredited, another estimated 200 on special chores. Of the broadcasting contingent, Canadian Broadcasting Corp., which set up and operated airing services for visitors and covered the conference for its own webs, had the most people. CBC's 90 accredited personnel ranged from script assistants to the president of the corporation.

Next came CTV, with 20. NBC and CBS had two each, with ABC using four including its Paris correspondent. BBC had three on hand.

North German Radio used eight, West German TV had six. Others covering included Italian tv and radio, Pyresa Radio of Madrid, Spain; Radio Free Europe, ITV news, Japan Broadcasting Corp.; RTB of Belgium, Rodel Productions Inc., Germany; Norwegian Broadcasting Corp.; Het Parool & KRO Radio, Netherlands; Deutschlandfunk radio, Germany; Voice of America, RTF radio, NCVR and AVRO radio, of Holland.

If E. William Henry keeps his lip buttoned publicly until Sept. 24, a long way off as such things go, it is remotely possible that the International Radio && Television Society will have a scoop. The trade org got the new FCC chairman to accept a speaking engagement that date in N. Y.

Sam Cook Digges, newly installed IRTS prexy, told an audience last week, at an IRTS luncheon, that Henry "indicated he has no speeches scheduled between now and that date." (But he has already been interviewed on WOR-TV, N.Y., by Cong. Emmanuel Celler.)

WNEW Radio, N. Y., has wound up the initial 15-week session of its News Workshop in cooperation with several metropolitan universities, including Columbia, Fordham, Rutgers, L.I.U. and N.Y.U. The Workshop gave two students daily the chance to participate in on-the-job training at the station under supervision of the news staff. A documentary prepared by the students was aired Sunday (26). Another 15-week session will begin in the fall. The project was sparked by Lee Hanna, WNEW's news director.

Countering the news of racial strife emanating from Birmingham, WLIB, N. Y., is coming up with a documentary series with an uplifting approach towards the Negro question. The series, "Negroes of New Jersey," spells out the 300-year heritage of Negro American life. It kicks off next Sunday with the cooperation of Alpha Kappa Alpha, national Negro sorority of some 40,000 career women.

Sonny Fox's "Wonderama" kiddie show on WNEW-TV, N. Y., is being shot this week in Denmark under a cooperative deal with the Danish Information Center and the Plumrose Food Factories, whose product is not yet available in the U. S. The company is planning to kick off its foods via the Fox show shortly. This week, "Wonderama" exec producer Mel Bailey and director Art Forrest left for Denmark to get enough material for a four-hour layout to be telecast on June 23.

"The International Hour," the global program exchange series arranged by CBS-TV o&o stations with broadcasters from overseas, will be seen on WETA-TV, Washington educational tv station.

Series will preem on WETA-TV June 8 with "The International Hour: American Jazz," produced by WBBM-TV, Chicago, as the American contribution to the third annual program exchange. Countries participating include Italy, Canada, Mexico, West Germany, France, Japan, Switzerland, Ireland, Holland and Yugoslavia.

sor of a 30-minute program lambasting Breathitt's opponent, A. B. "Happy" Chandler. The program was telecast on April 29. Voting day is today (Tues.).

The program was called "The Chandler Years in Review."

FCC said: "The application for time and facilities and the subsequent contracts executed by the advertising agency for the 'Committee for Good Government' indicated that the Committee was in fact acting on behalf of Mr. Breathitt."

WHAS-TV is owned by the Louisville Courier-Journal which is strongly backing Breathitt editorially in one of Kentucky's hardest fought political contests. Mark Ethridge, board chairman of the newspaper company, is a former NAB president.

Sponsor of the telecast at issue was identified only as the "Committee for Good Government," according to FCC.

durance contest were such makes as Ferrari, Jaguar, Porsche, Ford Cobra, Chevy Corvette, etc. Prior to the actual race, narrator Les Keiter interviewed top drivers who explained the tricky features of the course.

Some four cameramen compiled the footage for the film. Frequent closeups of cars, drivers plus interviews with officials and pit personnel helped capture the suspense and flavor of excitement that mark the classic. Shots from a blimp provide an added pictorial touch.

Keiter's commentary for the most part failed to intrude upon the race itself and often clarified points that lay observers no doubt would find puzzling. Citing the fine tuneups given experimental cars prior to the contest, he accurately pointed out that the race is as much a tribute to the mechanics as it is to the drivers.

A Ferrari, incidentally, won the classic (seven out of the first 10). There were winners in various categories, but it apparently was felt that these were too numerous to give more than passing mention. Picking up the tab on the WPIX, N.Y., Saturday (25) airing were such bankrollers as Schaefer Beer Vitalis hair tonic and Newport cigarets. Gilb.

AN AMERICAN MEMORIAL

Producer-Writer: Jim Dooley

WCCO-TV, Minneapolis. (tape)

Another entry in this CBS affiliate's documentary series, this show dealt with ceremonies in connection with the recent dedication of an Alfred Nobel Hall of Science memorial at nearby Gustavus Adolphus College, St. Peter, Minn. WCCO-TV had had its producer-writer Jim Dooley, director William Melchnik and cameraman Bob Sjoholm on the scene to tape this important and impressive event and WCCO-TV devoted a half-hour of its prime time to the trio's top-drawer compilation.

"An American Memorial" stacked up as the sort of program calculated to have its main appeal to intellectuals and especially to those who find much interest in science. Viewers heard about the scientific contributions of the late great Nobel as they were detailed and lauded. They also saw and heard a number of living leading scientists who were present for the occasion and there were Gustavus Adolphus awards to some of the latter.

Among those 26 Nobel prize winners present at this third largest gatherings of its kind were such notables as Drs. Ralph Bunche, Linus Paulling, James Frank, Glenn Seeborg, Philip Hench and Melvin Calvin. They were brought before the camera and to the mike to be seen or heard or both.

The part of the program which hit home hardest was Dr. Bunche's emphasis on the necessity of turning science away from potential atomic destruction toward peace and man's needs. A good showmanship bit brought into camera view a 16-year old lad, one of the 1,000 or more guests. His research at such an early age led to a Nobel award. Rees.

FRIDAY'S CHILDREN

SEARS ROEBUCK
WGN-TV, Chicago (film)

If the measure of a tv documentary is how well it accomplishes its basic purpose, then this WGN-TV opus can only be classed as a success despite a certain lack of art in the presentation. As a candid look inside a school for the retarded, "Friday's Children" is the kind of natural heart-tugger that wrings profound sympathy from the viewer and fills him with outrage that such institutions are so inadequately staffed and so pressed for funds.

It's a depressing film that many must have found hard to stomach, but it will unquestionably do much to enlist support for any proposed legislation that might be forthcoming to ameliorate conditions such as exist at the Dixon State School for the Mentally Retarded, the subject of this filmed tour.

With a "population" of 5,000, Dixon is rated the second largest institution of its kind. The grounds and buildings seem attractive enough and the rooms are clean and generally bright, but the inmates are a heartbreaking sight, and their rehabilitation does indeed seem impossible as long as an adequate staff and psychiatric leadership is lacking. As the film points out, the school has reached a stage at which it is reluctant to let the capable inmates graduate because it needs them so desperately to help with the chores.

Nineteen advanced patients work in the bakery, a number of others in the laundry and dining rooms, all of them paid by the privilege of having something to do. Others help the staff in caring for the helpless who are blind, hyperactive, deformed or wheelchair cases. The camera made the grim rounds of the dormitories, the solitary wards, the dayrooms, the children's sector, the hospital and the classrooms, and everywhere the story was the same: not enough help and not enough space. These shortages became particularly tragic when seen against cases where progress had been made.

Reporter Steve Schickel's interviewing manner at first seemed overly effusive and patronizing, but that proved to be the appropriate tone where the inmates were concerned. J. Darrell Strong's script was commendably restrained, but Carl Greyson's narration had an unfortunate commercial ring. The film was powerful for what it showed rather than for what was said. Les.

Wm. Morris' 12 Web Series Paces Talent Agencies; Ashley-Steiner 2d

Hollywood, May 28.

William Morris agency leads all other talent agencies in sales of network series for next season, but is given a close race by Ashley-Steiner, which emerges a powerful runnerup in the agency field which has undergone a complete realignment since the demise of MCA's talent agency last summer.

MCA in the past led agencies in sales to webs, but has since moved from the percentery field to production end of the business. Its tv subsid, Revue, dominates the production of vidpix in volume.

Morris has set 12 series—eight hours of programming weekly—for the 1963-64 season. Ashley-Steiner is next with eight shows and six-and-one-half hours weekly. In addition, however, A-S reps Arena Productions, which has three series going in its tie-up with MGM-TV, and the agency states it joined with Metro in selling these shows.

Third on the list is General Artists Corp., which has sold five series (three - and - one - half - hours weekly programming) plus the Edie Adams specials alternating with Sid Caesar's half-hours on ABC-TV next season, als. the Perry Como specials. Artists Agency has sold two hourlong shows for next semester, and Creative Management set three series, two hourlong, the other a half-hour.

WM entries for next season: "The Robert Taylor Show," "My Favorite Martian," "The Danny Thomas Show," "The Dick Van Dyke Show," "The Andy Griffith Show," "The Bill Dana Show," "The Joey Bishop Show," "Amos Burke," "The Outer Limits," "The Patty Duke Show," "The Jimmy Dean Show," and the David Wolper half-hour dox series on NBC-TV.

Ashley-Steiner: "Twilight Zone," "The Danny Kaye Show," "The Ed Sullivan Show," "Espionage," "The Nurses," "Hootenanny," "Candid Camera," "The Defenders," in addition reps Arena, which with MGM-TV turns out "The Eleventh Hour," "Dr. Kildare" and "The Lieutenant."

GAC: "The Lucy Show," "The Greatest Show on Earth," "The Glynis Johns Show," "The Jackie Gleason Show," "100 Grand," and the Edie Adams and Perry Como specials.

Artists Agency: "Ben Casey," "Breaking Point."

Creative Management: "The Judy Garland Show," "The Jack Paar Show," "The Phil Silvers Show."

Losing 'College Quiz' Bowl Team Wins 160G For St. Olaf College

Minneapolis, May 28.

Although it resulted in a 220 to 250 defeat at Univ. of Tennessee's hands, the appearance of the team of the St. Olaf College of Northfield, Minn., near here, as a General Electric's "College Quiz Bowl" program contestant last year has won the school a $160,000 donation.

This, of course, is in addition to the $500 for a scholarship which it received from the program's sponsor even though defeated. Winning teams land $1,500 similarly for their schools.

Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Gedge, Santa Rosa, Calif., were watching the particular intercollegiate quiz program and said they were so impressed and "won over" by the manner in which the losing St. Olaf team members, three male and one feminine students, deported themselves, they "wished to do the college some good."

St. Olaf President C. M. Granskou just announced last week the $160,000 gift under a trust agreement and why the donor made it.

Interviewed over the long distance phone at her California home, Mrs. Gedge said "we liked the St. Olaf team members' forthrightness."

Ferrante & Teicher's 'Cleopatra,' Franchi's 'B'way,' Greco's 'Hits,' Martino's 'Because' Top New LPs

FERRANTE & TEICHER: "LOVE THEMES FROM CLEOPATRA" (United Artists). There's a hefty disk splurge coming on Alex North's score for the "Cleopatra" pic but Ferrante & Teicher will have no trouble getting their treatment on the turntables for the kind of exposure that results in a sales rub-off. The piano team has a built-in audience conditioned to their keyboard way, especially on filmusic, and the "Cleopatra" music gives them plenty of opportunity to build lush and exotic sounds. An orch, directed by Nick Perito, gives their keyboard work a full-blown musical setting and helps drive home the romantic musical message with payoff impact.

SERGIO FRANCHI: "BROADWAY . . . I LOVE YOU" (RCA Victor). Sergio Franchi is at home in Shubert Alley as he is on the Via Veneto. He scored with the latter peg in his recent "Our Man In Italy" LP and will probably do even better here with this showtune pitch. He hits the big ballads ("Tonight," "As Long As She Needs Me," "If Ever I Would Leave You" and "What Kind Of Fool Am I") with an approach that's sure and gripping and designed to win over femme adulation. He's got a nice spirit, too, on the happier numbers ("Shalom" and "Make Someone Happy"), which makes it a fine all-around showtuner showcase.

BUDDY GRECO: "GREATEST HITS" (Epic). Here's another stepout package for Buddy Greco. It includes several pop single winners that he's had as well as songs he's trademarked along the nitery circuit so there's a ready-made market for this new wrapup and it should do extremely well on sales and spinning levels. He has an especially zippy vocal frame in this roundup and such nifties as "Around The World," "The Lady Is A Tramp," "Taking A Chance On Love" and "Mr. Lonely" come through with a spinning zest that commands play. "My Kind Of Girl" and "Like Young" also get the kind of Greco going-over that makes them highly appealing.

AL MARTINO: "I LOVE YOU BECAUSE" (Capitol). Al Martino recently made a strong return to the pop single scene with "I Love You Because," a country ballad in an appealing pop dressing. The formula for that click is repeated in the accompanying numbers in this package and it works on all. Belford Hendricks, who arranged and conducted, gives Martino a standout musical support that's right on the spinning ball. In addition to the already proven title song, there are "Take These Chains From My Heart," "I Really Don't Want To Know," "Just Call Me Lonesome" and "Lonely Drifter" to grab a strong hold on the album market.

EARL GRANT: "YES SIRREE!" (Decca). With his highly rhythmic disclick "Yes Sirree!" as the main attraction in this package, Earl Grant has worked up a repertoire around his vibrant piano-organ instrumentalizing to assure a similar reaction in the album market. He gives everything an instrumental drive that puts new excitement into standards and standard stature into newies. Especially effective and good pullout bets for programmers are "I Can't Stop Loving You," "Flamingo," "Caravan" and "Moon Over Miami."

THE LIVING STRINGS PLUS TWO PIANOS: "MY SILENT LOVE" (RCA Camden). For this latest outing by the Living Strings, twin pianos have been added for a solid effect. The lush-sounding strings create a quiet mood and give the pianos a chance to emote from time to time in their smooth and satiny setting. It's another strong session for the Living Strings, an outfit that has been a staple seller for the RCA Camden line. Included in this package are "My Silent Love," "Falling Leaves," "Intermezzo," "Canadian Sunset" and others from the pop and classical roster.

ART VAN DAMME QUINTET WITH JOHNNY SMITH: "A PERFECT MATCH" (Columbia). The pairing of Art Van Damme's Quintet and Johnny Smith's guitar results in a nifty sound experience. Van Damme's smooth combo work led by his accordion excellently complements Smith's guitaring and the two supply a jazz play that's extremely easy to take and one that offers a good assortment of programming sides. There are some solid standards, "Spring Is Here," "Bye Bye Blackbird," "Gone With The Wind" and "In The Wee Small Hours"—and some newies, especially a Smith composition titled "Satan's Doll," to bolster a fine instrumental package.

STANLEY BLACK & THE LONDON FESTIVAL ORCHESTRA: "FILM SPECTACULAR" (London). Recorded via London's new 20 channel console technique, this package offers a lot of plus audio values without sacrificing any of the true melodic values inherent in the filmusic used for the "sound" display. In fact, many of the scores are enhanced by the vigorous treatment offered by the tandem work of the London engineers and the full-blown orch under Stanley Black's precise directorial hand. Among the highlights are the orch and vocal chorus treatment of "The Longest Day," and medleys from "Around The World," "West Side Story," "Breakfast At Tiffany's," "Exodus" and "Henry V."

"THE ESTABLISHMENT" (Riverside). The sometimes wild and most often witty material of "The Establishment" company from England is successfully captured via this platter. With a cast which includes John Fortune, Jeremy Geidt, Eleanor Brown and John Bird, the group lampoons its native government and mores as well as some Stateside failings with sure-aimed darts and a slick presentation. The only difficulty with the session is that some of the material is dated from a topical standpoint, such as talk about the Skybolt crisis and other matters of some months back. Otherwise, this is a charming and funny session, and even these dated bits recall the situations with effective barbed humor. The performers each score strongly in their respective bits. The total effect is a winning and entertaining outing.

"HOW THE WEST WAS WON" (United Artists). A variety of top film tuners worked on the score for Metro's "How West Was Won," which was a collaborative effort all around with three directors and many stars. Ken Darby and Alfred Newman are responsible for the original music written for the picture, but the talents of Robert E. Dolan, Johnny Mercer and Sammy Cahn are also present. The music is nicely evocative of the mood of the various western segments that made up this film and the pieces have been nicely set into this LP so that there are individual tunes of singular identity captured in each band, an accomplisrment for soundtrack albums. The music has a pleasant and solid sound and will doubtless make a must souvenir for the pic's fans.

THE TOKYO BOYS: "MIDNIGHT IN TOKYO" (MGM). Laced with a touch of Oriental flavor, this LP by the Tokyo Boys is a good example of the imitative powers of the Japanese. Selections are all very Yank styled and played in the best tradition of western feeling. The sound here is a big one, crisply captured by MGM's 21 Channel Sound stereo process. Waxed in Tokyo, the tunes are all by Sam Urai, as arranged by Tsunemi Naito. The blend of oriental musical style with a sometimes Kentonesque Yank jazz habit registers effectively on some numbers and the overall result is an interesting and entertaining session with something for a variety of musical ears.

POLLY BERGEN: "ACT ONE SING TOO" (Philips). The heyday of filmusic is nicely recapped by Polly Bergen in this, her first album for Philips. She has a flock of standout songs to work with, and with the help of Jerry Fielding, who arranged and conducted, she doesn't let them down. In the repertoire are the memorable "Continental," "They Can't Take That Away From Me," "The Way You Look Tonight," "Cheek To Cheek," "Easy To Love" and "Hi-Lili Hi-Lo," among others, and Miss Bergen treats 'em with the respect due songs of such stature. Her lyric handling makes them all worthwhile spinning bets.

Top Singles Of The Week

(The 'Best Bets' of This Week's 100-Plus Releases)

BRIAN HYLAND . . . . . I'M AFRAID TO GO HOME
(ABC-Paramount) . . . . . Save Your Heart For Me

Bryan Hyland's "I'm Afraid To Go Home" (Pogo) moves brightly down a rocking groove with an arresting folk-slanted lyric which this singer projects neatly. "Save Your Heart For Me" (Pogo*) is a somewhat more conventional entry with fair chances.*

HENRY MANCINI . . . . . BANZAI PIPELINE
(RCA Victor) . . . . . Rhapsody In Blue

Henry Mancini's "Banzai Pipeline" (Southdale) hits a driving pace in an instrumental vein that shapes up as another winner for this talented young Hollywood composer-conductor. "Rhapsody In Blue" (New World*) works over the Gershwin classic for the maximum thematic values within a three-minute framework.*

THE DRIFTERS . . . . . IF YOU DON'T COME BACK
(Atlantic) . . . . . Rat Race

The Drifters' "If You Don't Come Back" (Cotillion†) is a solid rhythm ballad with a bluesy lyric which the lead singer of this combo delivers with strong impact. "Rat Race" (Cotillion†) has a serious-minded message in a dramatic setting for arresting results.

MONGO SANTAMARRA . . . . . GET THE MONEY
(Battle) . . . . . Yeh-Hey

Mongo Santamarra's "Get The Money" (Mongo†) shapes up as a jazz instrumental, with incidental words, which has enough steam to drive through the pop market in high speed. "Yeh-Hey" (Mongo†) is more of the same.

JAN & DEAN . . . . . SURF CITY
(Liberty) . . . . . She's My Summer Girl

Jan & Dean's "Surf City" (Screen Gems-Columbia†) is an okay example of the new song craze which has taken hold in various sectors. This one rocks steadily with a teenage lyric with a slightly delinquent idea. "She's My Summer Girl" (SG-Columbia†) rolls down a similar rhythm groove.

FRANK SINATRA . . . COME BLOW YOUR HORN
(Reprise) . . . . . I Have Dreamed

Frank Sinatra's "Come Blow Your Horn" (Maraville), title song of the Paramount film, is a sharply written ballad tailored for this performer's swinging delivery. It's due for across-the-board spins. "I Have Dreamed" (Williamson*) is a fine oldie reprised in excellent style.*

RAY WHITLEY . . . . . YOUNG HEARTACHES
(Veejay) . . . . . Teenage Crush

Ray Whitley's "Young Heartaches" (Central Songs†) shapes up as an appealing slice with a bouncy tune carrying a well-written lyric handled very nicely by this singer. "Teenage Crush" (Central Songs†) is a more routine ballad side with a trite idea.

PAT BOONE . . TIE ME KANGAROO DOWN SPORT
(Dot) . . . . . I Feel Like Crying

Pat Boone's "Tie Me Kangaroo Down Sport" (Beechwood†) is a flavorsome Aussie-flavored folk song handled in colorful style by this singer with good choral support. "I Feel Like Crying" (Coogat) is a pretty ballad with a simple message which could break through for wide impact.

PHIL STACEY . . . . . LIZ
(20th-Fox) . . . . . Do Anything

Phil Stacey's "Liz" (Kennebek) is an attempted hitch-hiker on the upcoming "Cleopatra" pic. It's an okay Liz-whiz-boxoffice big entry for promotional purposes. "Do Anything" (Lady Grace†) is a solid rhythm slice which could rack up the plays.*

MARTY HILL . . . . . THAT'S WHAT YOU ALWAYS DO
(Brunswick) . . . . . The Lonely Man

Marty Hill's "That's What You Always Do" (Merrimac†) swings down a commercial pathway with a fine lyric belted in a very stylish way by this singer. "The Lonely Man" (Cramart†) is another nifty side also rating close attention.

BARRY MANN . . . . . JOHNNY SURFBOARD
(Colpix) . . . . . Graduation Time

Barry Mann's "Johnny Surfboard" (Screen Gems-Columbia†) is a parlay of the current surfing cycle with the macabre tear-jerking themes of a couple of years ago. It's a good saga effectively handled by this singer. "Graduation Time" (SG-Columbia†) is a fair seasonal entry pegged for the juve set.

ARETHA FRANKLIN . . . . . SAY IT ISN'T SO
(Columbia) . . . . . Here's Where I Came In

Aretha Franklin's "Say It Isn't So" (Berlin) is an interesting rendition of this oldie by a songstress whose potential is still growing. "Here's Where I Came In" (Action†) is a teen-angled ballad also handled ably.*

JOHNNY NASH . . . . . HELPLESS
(Groove) . . . . . I've Got A Lot To Offer

Johnny Nash's "Helpless" (Chappell) registers as an excellent ballad with a classy lyric which this experienced singer handles with polish and savvy in his first outing on this label. "I've Got A Lot To Offer" (Tudor†) also moves with an attractive lilt which should earn spins.*

KING KOBRA . . . . . BWI EXPRESS
(Request) . . . . . Flamingo Limbo

King Kobra's "BWI Express" (Pleasant) is a swinging limbo instrumental with a clarinet solo on top for a very pleasing sound that could hit big. "Flamingo Limbo" (Pleasant*) is another Caribbean-styled number with a similarly winning sound. Herm.*

'NEW' ORIG B'WAY CAST FIELD

Kay, Kameron, Douglas Rolling Their FM Label; Eye 30 LP's in 1st Year

A new record label, simply called FM, is getting ready to roll into market. The diskery, owned and operated by Monte Kay, Pete Kameron and Alan Douglas, will record a broad range of folk music, jazz, pops and spoken word disks.

The tag for the label, according to Kay, was inspired by FM radio programming. The emphasis will be on adult recorded entertainment and the sound quality of FM radio.

The diskery expects to have 30 albums out in its first year of operation. Distributors for the new company will be Vee-Jay, which will service FM through its distribution firm, Dart Record Sales.

To assist the label in its folk field efforts, FM has engaged Freddie Weintraub, operator of the Bitter End in New York's Greenwich Village, as an indie producer. The deal also involves the club and gives FM exclusive recording rights there.

The first two FM releases are "Chris Connor At The Village Gate," recorded live at Art D'Lugoff's club in Greenwich Village, and an album waxed in Paris by Douglas, titled "George Anderson: Our Man In Africa." Anderson, an African singer who has been clicking in Europe, makes his debut with this set.

Already completed is an album by jazz composer and arranger Bill Russo. Titled "Stereophony," it features a double orchestra with single rhythm section between. The album was recorded in London, utilizing the orch Russo uses in his BBC broadcasts. Russo is now living in England.

On tap for FM are LP's by the Eric Dolphy group a "Bitter End Hootenanny," featuring Jo Mapes, Ronnie Gilbert, Bob Carey and Len Chandler; "The Jazz Committee For Latin American Affairs," recorded live in Rio de Janeiro in July, 1961, with Herbie Mann and Zoot Sims; a new group called The Newport Singers; a gospel set by the Ward Singers; and two spoken word LP's—Ken Nordine reading "Balzac's Passion in the Desert" and Norman Mailer's stand at New York's Carnegie Hall, which will be taped during the performance there Friday (31).

Kay is also involved in the personal management field and is former veepee of the United Artists label. Douglas was recently with UA, where he built its jazz line, and Kameron has long been active in both jazz and folk music as manager, publisher and producer.

The company has been in the planning since last fall.

Vox Prod. Infringed Its Tag, Vienna Philharmonic Claims in $750,000 Suit

The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra filed suit in N. Y. Federal Court last week against Vox Productions and George H. Mendelssohn for treble damages of $750,000 for alleged infringement of the name Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra, Vienna Philharmonics, or any other name containing the name "Vienna."

The complaint charges that the defendants have misappropriated and used plaintiff's name without authorization and refer to the plaintiff as the performing orchestra in the sale of its recordings. The Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra claims that it has not authorized such usage or use of the words and names.

The complaint further alleges that the defendants have misappropriated to themselves the rights of the plaintiff in its artistic performances of musical works, misappropriated the commercial value and deprived plaintiff of royalties. The suit claims that under a similar action in 1955 Vox and Mendelssohn, its president, agreed to stop the manufacture and sale of recordings containing reproduction of plaintiff's work. The current suit contends that Vox broke this agreement.

LEIPZIG TOPS UA'S NEW CREATIVE SERVICES DIV.

United Artists Records has set up a Creative Services division with Lloyd Leipzig as its topper. In the new post, Leipzig will supervise the advertising, publicity, and exploitation departments and will also be in charge of artists relations.

In addition, Leipzig will act as liaison with the parent film company in release of soundtrack albums and music from United Artists pictures.

For the past several years Leipzig had been operating his own personal management firm, W&L Management, representing such artists as Tony Bennett, Jill Corey, Lu Ann Simms and Gary Morton. He had also been working with Mitch Miller as pub-exploitation director for the "Sing Along With Mitch" tv show. Before that, Leipzig had been in charge of pop publicity at Columbia Records.

Boom in Foreign Supermarkets To Hypo Budget Wax

The supermarket spread in England and the Continent is being looked upon by tradesters as having bullish effects on the budget-priced disks.

According to Cy Leslie, president of Pickwick International, the supermarket is one of the key outlets for budget-priced recordings. "This is a significant factor," he said, "when you note that records are now finding their way into supermarkets all over Europe and conservative industry spokesmen, such as Eric Sabatini, secretary of the English Supermarket Assn., are predicting an increase of 400% in the number of supermarkets by 1970. The total has gone up almost 75% in the last 18 months."

Leslie figures that the lowprice album market in Europe is now at the stage that it was in the U.S. about five years gao. "Non-music retail outlets are first starting to move into sales of recordings," he said, "although some of the more progressive merchants have already entrenched themselves solidly in the field."

Leslie pointed to the Migron chain of 1,000 supermarkets in Switzerland and the leading department stores in Belgium as examples.

In a move to bolster its sales in Europe, Pickwick has now set up a distribution arrangement for Belgium, Holland and West Germany in which these countries will be serviced directly from England.

Pickwick's British subsid handles both pressing and distribution functions for the United Kingdom on the same lowprice children's and specialty record lines the parent company now sells in the U.S. and Canada. Pickwick opened its British subsid in November, 1962.

Premier Albums Chalks Up Record $322,239 Net

Premier Albums, lowprice disk combine, hit a peak sales take of $4,207,268 for the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, 1963. Net income after taxes was a record $322,239.

The sales figure marked a 67% increase over the $2,513,181 take of the previous year and the net increased 76%, equivalent to earnings of $1.24 a share based on 260,000 shares outstanding, from $183,312, equivalent to earnings of 71c a share on the same number of shares outstanding.

DISKERIES, WEBS TURNING ANGELS

By MIKE GROSS

The original Broadway cast field is taking on a new look via record company and/or parent company diversification into legit activities.

Late last year Capitol Records locked up the future production efforts of Cy Feuer & Ernest H. Martin with a partnership deal in the team's operations and last week ABC-Paramount, through a $1,000,000 investment by its parent firm, American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres, wrapped up three forthcoming musicals to be produced by Lester Osterman and Jule Styne's On-Stage Productions.

There are still plenty other musical properties coming in next season to help RCA Victor and Columbia (Decca, which started the whole original Broadway cast album bit with "Oklahoma," has virtually withdrawn from the race in the past couple of seasons) continue their lead in this area but the Cap and ABC-Par ties obviously narrow the bidding opportunities.

RCA Victor is expected to be in the Broadway sweepstakes next season with "Jennie," the Mary Martin starrer with a score by Howard Dietz & Arthur Schwartz, and "One Hundred Ten In The Shade," the musicalization of "The Rainmaker" by Tom Jones & Harvey Schmidt. Columbia is expected to be represented with the Meredith Willson tuner, "Here's Love," although nothing's been firmed yet.

ABC-Par's Trio

ABC-Paramount, which has yet to be represented with a Broadway show (it had $25,000 invested in "13 Daughters" a couple of seasons ago but never recorded it) gets "A Girl To Remember," "The Ghost Goes West" and "Mrs. A." through the AB-PT plunge in the On-Stage ventures.

"A Girl To Remember," which will star Carol Burnett, has music by Jule Styne and book and lyrics by Adolph Green & Betty Comden. It's scheduled to open on Broadway in November.

"The Ghost Goes West," an adaptation by Sam & Bella Spewack of the pic that starred the late Robert Donat, will have music by Jule Styne and lyrics by Stan-

'Porgy' in New Ride Via Victor

"Porgy & Bess," the George Gershwin opera, is set for still another disk ride. This time it will come out of the RCA Victor shop with Leontyne Price as Bess, William Warfield as Porgy and John W. Bubbles recreating the Sportin' Life role he played in the original 1935 production.

The package, which will feature highlight from the Gershwin opus (lyrics are by Du Bose Heyward and Ira Gershwin), is being readied for fall release. It will then join a flock of other "P&B" sets that have been cut by various diskeries, Victor among them, in the past.

In the "P&B" vocal catalog are a cast package of highlights with Todd Duncan, Anne Brown and Avon Long on Decca; a complete three-LP set with Lawrence Winters, Camilla Williams and Avon Long on Columbia; the soundtrack album of the Samuel Goldwyn production, also on Columbia; a jazz interpretation by Mel Torme and Frances Faye on Bethlehem, and a highlights package by Lena Horne and Harry Belafonte on Victor.

The upcoming Victor version was recorded in the Dynagroove process at the St. George Hotel Ballroom in Brooklyn. It was conducted by Skitch Henderson, and Leonard De Paur served as choral director. Dick Mohr was Victor's artiste & repertoire director on the date.

KFWB's Anti-Payola Campaign Asks 'Purity' Pledge From Disk Promoters

Hollywood, May 28.

Guarding against any recurrence of the payola practice by record promoters and putting the station on record as unalterably opposed to any attempts to influence the performance of its platters, J. J. Bernard, KFWB general manager, has dispatched letters of policy to 100 members of the So. Cal. Record Industry Promotion. Attached is an affidavit form to be signed by SCRIP members attesting to their "innocence" in dealing with the station's jockeys or record librarian.

Of the 100 copies of the affidavit mailed May 14, only 10 have been returned signed, according to Bernard. Some SCRIP members, he said, are consulting their attorneys before committing themselves. KFWB is the first radio station to enunciate a policy on recordings and, to Bernard's knowledge, none other is following suit. From Capitol, Columbia and Dot have come complete agreement with the KFWB policy and assurance of their cooperation.

Bernard said it became necessary to make the station's policy known to SCRIP because of "several anonymous phone calls and loose statements." None of the charges could be proved, he said, and in his opinion, "were levelled by those unsuccessful in their field." One phone caller threatened to take his complaint to the FCC. Said Bernard, "I'm sure all my people are clean but I have to convince SCRIP of their complete honesty."

One provision of the station's policy emphasizes that any gift with a normal retail value of more than $20 shall be regarded as a gift of more than nominal value; a loan in any amount is considered to be an extraordinary favor. Further, any employee or member of his household who receives a gift, except as provided above, is required to return the same immediately. Any employee or member of his family who is offered a gift or extraordinary courtesy or favor except as provided above is required to decline the same.

KENNEDY TO PRODUCE EPIC C&W PLATTERS

Jerry Kennedy has joined Epic Records as a producer in the pop artists & repertoire department. He'll be responsible to Robert Morgan, Epic's exec producer, for production of all country & western recordings.

Kennedy will headquarter in Nashville and will supervise recordings by such artists as Jim & Jesse & The Virginia Boys, Jerry McCain, Bobby Helms, and Shirley Ray.

Before coming to Epic, Kennedy had been a&r director for Mercury in Nashville for two years. During that time he supervised the recordings of Rex Allen and Darryl McCall, among others. In addition, he served as co-producer for recordings by Patti Page, Clyde McPhatter and Brook Benton.

Norse Lands Net 800G for UN On 'All Star' Album

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees picked up more than $800,000 last week from the proceeds of the sale of the "All Star Festival" LP in Denmark, Norway and Sweden. The LP, which was produced by the High Commissioner's office for the benefit of refugees, was released on a world-wide basis last February.

In Sweden, sales of the album broke, within 24 hours, all previous records for an LP: 122,000 were sold in one day. In Norway and Denmark, sales reached 35,000 and 25,000, respectively, within the first week of sale.

The LP features 13 top diskers from various labels. All of them, as well as music publishers, the diskeries, and many others associated with the production of the record have contributed their services and waived royalties so that maximum profits might be obtained for the refugees.

The checks from the proceeds of the sales in the three countries were presented to Felix Schnyder, UN High Commissioner For Refugees, by the permanent representatives to the UN of Denmark, Norway and Sweden respectively — Aage Hessellund, Jensenvhsivert A. Nielsen and Mrs. Agda Rossel at special ceremonies in New York last Wednesday (22).

Pitt Symph's Dr. Steinberg To Baton in Poland, Israel

A three-month tour has been mapped out for Dr. William Steinberg, director of the Pittsburgh Symphony, for concerts behind the Iron Curtain and Israel.

He'll begin his varied conducting engagements June 11 at the Zurich Festival. There, with Van Cliburn as soloist, Dr. Steinberg will conduct the Tanhalle Orchestra. Artur Rubinstein will be guest soloist on Sept. 8 when Dr. Steinberg conducts the National Philharmonic Orchestra of Poland at the Festival of Montreux, Switzerland.

Dr. Steinberg, who is co-founder of what is now known at the Israel Philharmonic, will play concert performances with the group throughout Israel from July 20-Aug. 15.

Following his concert with Van Cliburn, Dr. Steinberg will go to Warsaw, Poland, where he'll baton the Warsaw National Philharmonic, June 14-15. He's also scheduled for concerts in Cologne with the West German Radio Orchestra, and at the Berlin Festival with the Orchestra of the Berlin Sender.

Verve's Billie Holiday LP Spins Up Legal Discords, Hamilton Sues for 150G

Chico Hamilton filed suit in N.Y. Supreme Court last week against Verve Records, a division of MGM, for an injunction, $150,000 damages and an accounting for the allegedly unlawful use of his name and portrait in connection with an album called "The Essential Billie Holiday."

The complaint claims that Hamilton played in concert in 1956 called "Lady Sings The Blues" at New York's Carnegie Hall, starring the late Billie Holiday. The plaintiff, who was leader and star performer of the group called The Chico Hamilton Trio, received feature billing.

It's charged that on Dec. 1, 1961, Verve started distributing the recording of the concert which embodies Hamilton's performance. He claims that he authorized no one to record it and that the defendant unlawfully used his name without permission.

Hamilton moved for a summary judgment. The defendant made a general denial of all allegations and asked dismissal of the suit. Verve claims that it satisfied its obligations to Hamilton if any, when it purchased from Louis McKay, administrator of the late Billie Holiday's estate, the concert performance with the plaintiff's performance incorporated.

Verve also claims that notwithstanding its representations, it paid Hamilton compensation at the rate required in its collective bargaining agreement with the American Federation of Musicians by mailing a check to the plaintiff in 1962, in care of the Local.

Haber Joins Frank

Bert Haber has been added to the professional staff of Frank Music. In addition to contacting record company artists & repertoire men, he will also serve as director of national record promotion.

Frank's professional manager, Bert Siegelson, will also use Haber to assist in the acquisition and development of new copyrights and to work on firm's standard catalog.

A veteran music man, for the past few years Haber has been running his own indie promotion service.

L.A. LOCAL 47 UPS ARRANGERS' SCALE

Hollywood, May 28.

AFMusicians' Local 47 is tilting, effective June 1, minimum scale for arrangers and copyists. The present going scale for orchestrators is being hiked 25%, copyists' scale 10%. Last scale raise for the two classes of AFMembers was in 1958.

According to Local 47 veepee Max Herman, decision to tilt the categories is to bring their scales into line with other musicians. All classifications of actively working musicians have been tilted within last several years.

More prominent categories of paperwork and their minimum scales are: stock dance arrangement, $140; Dixieland arrangement for fewer than nine instruments, $95; piano part up to 64 bars, $28; vocal piano part, $28.

More than 1,000 Local 47 members are employed in these crafts, and the top tier, of course, always gets over scale. About the peak going rate for an instrumental arrangement for a disk is $250. Most top arrangers tinkle off four such arrangements weekly, on average.

ley Styne, his son. Cole Porter is scheduled to do the score for "Mrs. A," Richard Aldrich's book about his late wife, Gertrude Lawrence.

The publishing rights to the three scores are not involved in the AB-PT backing. Styne's work with Comden & Green is published in Stratford Music, a firm that has been set up for the compositions with his son, and Porter publishes via Buxton Hill. All are under the Chappell wing.

Move Cues Interest

The AB-PT move into the theatre at this time is especially interesting since CBS and NBC have been backing away from it of late. CBS cleaned up with its $400,000-plus investment in "My Fair Lady" and had all of the $675,000 backing in "Camelot" but it, and its subsidiary Columbia Records, have been tightening their belts since.

However, Leonard Goldenson, president of AB-PT, said that he was not disturbed by the growing lack of interest in the theatre by record companies and broadcasters. He said, "As a leading, broadly diversified company in the entertainment and communications business, we are pleased to announce this move into the Broadway musical theatre field."

The deal with On-Stage makes AB-PT a limited partner in the productions furnishing 75% of the investments. On-Stage is the general partner and will raise the other 25% from investors who will then share in the limited partnership.

On the other hand, Capitol's deal with Feuer & Martin makes it the first diskery to become general partners in play productions. Cap has provided a $3,000,000 revolving fund for the producing team. The deal also makes Cap a 50% partner in F&M's ownership of the Lunt-Fontanne Theatre in New York. F&M also are in ownership with Electric & Musical Industries, Cap's parent company, and British realtor Charles Clore on the Shaftesbury Theatre in London.

Feuer & Martin's musical projects for next season have not yet been set. They are currently represented on Broadway with "How To Succeed In Business Without Really Trying" and "Little Me." Both original cast packages are in the RCA Victor hopper since the deals were arranged before the Cap move-in.

Top Sidemen Becoming Disk 'Names' Under Enoch Light's Album Project

The sideman is coming to the front. In an album project designed by Enoch Light, head of Command Records, prominent disk session tootlers are being given a baton and billing and beginning to pull in royalties on record sales for the first time.

Heretofore, such sidemen as Dick Hyman (piano), Tony Mottola (guitar), Bob Haggert (bass), Doc Severinsen (trumpet), Urbie Green (trombone), Charles Magnante (accordion), and Don Lammond (drums) were virtually anonymous entities on record dates but under Light's guidance they are now becoming disk "names" in their own right.

In addition, instead of just getting regulation union fees for their disk chores, they now get a royalty participation share when they take over the podium.

According to Light, many of these sidemen who just got by financially, are invloved in royalty payoffs on more than 100,000 albums. "And not only that," he added, "they've become important recording properties with an established audience for anything they make."

Light believes his gamble on bringing the sidemen to the forefront has paid off because they, possibly more than anyone else really know what's going on musically and are aware of what the public wants by virtue of their continuous work on recording dates for other artists and other companies as well as on radio and tv.

He's now blueprinted a schedule that will give each sideman a chance to step out with two albums a year. An unusual aspect of this project is that the sidemen continue to hold their anonymous chairs when one of their colleagues is pulled up front to conduct a session of his own.

Command's instrumental push on the sidemen-leaders has begun to pay off on a global scale, too. Deals already have been arranged for distribution of these packages in Germany with Deutsche Grammophon, in France with Pathe Marconi, in Japan with King, in Australia with Festival, in Belgium with Anvers, in Hong Kong with Colonial, in Africa with Truton, in Canada with Spartan, and with various distributors in South America.

Florida Suncoast Salute To Lombardo Hits Wow $6,700 Take at St. Pete

St. Petersburg, Fla., May 28.

A switch at Suncoast's plush Port-O-Call last Sunday night (19) found Guy Lombardo relieved of baton and throned in seat of honor, to be feted by area entertainers in a tribute set to music.

The festimonial, brainchild of Tampa Town Crier columnist Howard Stewart, was devised and televised to honor Lombardo, brothers Victor, Leibert and Carmen and the Royal Canadians for focusing attention on night life on the west coast of Florida.

The 600-seat dining room was full, representing an approximate $6,700 gross from a hefty $7.50 minimum. Festivities were mostly smooth sailing, only miring momentarily for WFLA-TV camera positioning.

Emceeing the bash was St. Pete Beach fave Lenny Dee. The Victorlans, five zany singing comedians now appearing at Tampa's Congress Inn, scored easily. Ditto from Tampatown's Columbia Restaurant were Pego & his Violins, featuring tunesmith Antonio Curbelo serenading Lombardo and his wife with "Granada."

Also on the bill were Bob Monfort and Gene Bass, from Starlite Lounge in Tampa; Lindsay Meehan, an impeccable pianist, with Wes Hird and Kitty Devinney from St. Pete Harlequin, and Emil & Christine Terry of Davis Island Rose Room.

Dee, presenting trophy to Lombardo, made an understatement in pointing out that his "act has done a lot for the house." Impact of the Lombardos' descent on Tierra Verde's Port - O - Call (developer Louis Berlanti received plaque also) has reverberated throughout Florida's entire west coast and is reflected in upsurge of biz in every entertainment media.

Recent announcement of big bands and acts to showcase during Canadians' summer absence has served as shot-in-arm for local business in general and niteries in particular and a record-breaking season is jubilantly anticipated by bonifaces.

Ceremonies curtained in time for regular show, featuring thrush Joan Fairfax and repeat comedian Lee Caron, who will accompany the band to Washington for hospital ship Hope ball, Jackie Kennedy's pet project. Terp team of Jack & Sally Jenkins is also appearing at the ball.

Sailing into The Port for May 28-June 9 show will be Los Chavales de Espana, with Jimmy Nelson. Ralph Flannagan and band take over the bandstand June 9 for month. Odie.

HOUSE WEIGHS FATE OF $5 JUKEBOX FEE BILL

Washington, May 28.

The House Copyright Subcommittee meets in executive session tomorrow (Wednesday) to decide the fate of the $5 jukebox licensing proposal. The $5 fee bill, as an alternative to the present jukebox copyright exemption, received some rough treatment at recent subcommittee hearings and emerged with backing only from its sponsor, Rep. Emanuel Celler (D.-N.Y.) and subcommittee chairman Edwin Willis (D.-La.).

On Wednesday, the subcommittee can report the license bill to the full judiciary committee or propose another approach to filling the jukebox gap.

Inside Stuff—Music

In military circles, to get a name up on anything (street, bldg., ship), the man has to die to make it. In Carnegie Hall, N.Y., Friday (17) during the Armed Forces week concert by the NORAD 90-piece band, retired USAF Col. (and ex-VARIETY) Barney Oldfield almost made it when after being "commanded" to come on from Beverly Hills, Cal., found a "Col. Barney Oldfield March" being premiered. The East Orange, N.J. church-school music publishing house, Canyon Press Inc., is scheduled to publish it. It was composed by the NORAD bandleader, Lt. Col. Mark Azzolina, as a tribute to Oldfield under whose supervision the U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force and Royal Canadian Air Force-manned musical combo was started in 1959.

When called to the Carnegie Hall stage to accept a specially embossed words and music copy, Oldfield was cognizant of the musical saints who had preceded him and said: "In my military schooling I, was taught to be judicious in choice of weapons—never use a cannon to kill a fly—but they certainly used a cannon on me tonight!"

It's expected that within the next six months more than 150,000,000 people around the world will get a taste of U.S. jazz via "The International Hour: American Jazz," which was aired two weeks ago over the five CBS owned tv stations (New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, St. Louis and L.A.). The show, which was produced at WBBM-TV, Chicago, will now be going to tv stations of 11 countries in Europe, North and South America and the Far East. The program features such performers as Count Basie, Carmen McRae, Teddy Wilson, Jack Teagarden, Stan Getz, Gary MacFarland, Lambert, Hendricks & Bavan, Lurlean Hunter and Muddy Waters. Willis Conover, jazz broadcaster on the Voice of America, is the host. The tv tab for the showings in the U.S. was picked up by the Miller Brewing Co.

More than $20,000 worth of records have gone out to the winners of this year's "National Music Week Essay Contest" and their respective schools. Writers of the winning essays received a set of LP records valued at more $250 and an additional set went to the school of the winner's choice. This year's contest, in which 42 states were represented, was conducted by the National Federation of Music Clubs supported by a grant from Broadcast Music Inc. The records were supplied courtesy of the Record Industry Assn. of America.

A "Charlie Parker Memorial Fund Program" has been scheduled by the Jazz Arts Society at New York's Carnegie International Endowment Center next Monday (3) to help raise funds for the maintenance of its N.Y. School of Jazz. Slated to appear at the concert are the Kenny Durham Quintet with Joe Henderson, the Ted Curzon Quartet and the Freddie Redd Quintet.

The New York Times has made the disk grade. Philips Records has come out with a record titled "I Got My Job Through The New York Times." The tune was written by Claus Ogerman and Dorothy Jones. It was cut by The Stepping Stones. The disk is now being sent to the newspaper's classified advertising agency and employment agency clients.

Music Fests

performance (an unknown opera with no name talent) all seats were sold and at least two critics from Paris, who came down without previous notice, had to stand up throughout the performance. It's happy days at the Chamber of Commerce—and that's no County Fair dream-sequence.

Incidentally, it's not a giveaway. Ducats to the Grand Theatre, where most of the shows and concerts are played, are scaled to a $4.60 top, which is a lot of money in a French provincial town. G. Delort, who does a fine job preparing and running the Festival, would give no figures on profit and loss, but said that there was a 72% sold figure prior to the opening for nine of the 11 items lined up, which speaks for itself. If you think this is buildup shed a tear for your innocent reporter who didn't bother reserving a seat in advance on the train from Paris for the opening—and therefore had to stand up in the train for the entire trip. And this for an opera he could very easily have lived without.

So to get to first things first. The opening consisted of a production of "Mathis the Painter" an opera by Hindemith which has not been seen or heard since 1951. And won't be for that length of time again. It is not that this is a bad opera, it is just very long, and very dull. It is a symphonic opera, almost constantly contrapuntal. The music is more important than the voices. And the voices, if they are to cope with the music at all, must be absolutely top-notch. Which they are not here.

Rene Bianco is the best singer of the lot, a beautiful, rich voice—but without the slightest idea how to move around the stage, or what to do with his hands. The sets by Claude Perrier are interesting and Reinhardt Peters, in the pit, did a lovely job with the pit-men, but lost the people on-stage.

Maybe it makes no difference. The opera was produced especially for the occassion, will run its five performances to full houses and will be forgotten. Idea was to produce something "different," and "different" it is. For the rest of the Festival activities, the program lists the Conservatoire Orchestra from Paris with Paul Paray at the baton, Teresa Stich Randall, Henry Szeryng, a troupe of ballet dancers billed as "Hommage to the Marquis de Cuevas," Pierre Fournier, Byron Janis,

Mickey Goldsen, Who Digs Polynesian Tunes, Finds 'Em Paying Off in Japan

By DAVE JAMPEL

Tokyo, May 28.

Because of the Japanese public's accelerated interest in Polynesian music, Yank publisher Michael H. Goldsen has had his income from this country quadrupled in the last four years. And this year, he expects his royalties from Japan to double the 1962 figure.

Goldsen, prexy of Criterian Music and Atlantic Music, has been pioneering in the publishing of Polynesian music for the last 10 years. While Hawaiian music has always had a large following in Japan, the budding boom in traditional Tahitian tamure dance music is mainly responsible for Goldsen's hiked earnings from this market.

Attending a Victor of Japan promotional tamure dance contest at Sankei Hall, Goldsen said he was astonished to find Japanese interest in the dance moving toward craze proportions. "And all of the music they played was mine," he beamed.

Goldsen noted that the tamure dance is catching on around the globe. He described it as a dance where "women shake their hips and men shake their knees." He explained that the tamure started to break into popularity about two years ago when Brigitte Bardot was doing it in St. Tropez.

The dance received a big boost in MGM's remake of "Mutiny on the Bounty," for which Goldsen supervised the musical numbers. Tarita, the Tahitian actress, performed the tamure in the film. Two songs from Goldsen's catalog, "Tenanu Puka Rua" and "The Farewell Song" were utilized.

Polynesian music is now moving into the pop field, Goldsen said, with "Vini Vini Tamure" on several RCA Victor albums and singles. With his longtime investment starting to pay off, he reflected, "I've been pushing Polynesian music for 10 years, but nobody paid any attention to it until now."

The field is still not without its headaches, Goldsen cited. "Lots of people think Tahitian songs are in the public domain," he pointed out. "Tahitian music is all original, the same as modern music anyplace. But because Tahiti is remote and some of the Tahitian musicians who can't read and write learn their songs from records and the radio, when they go to Europe and other places they record these songs without regard to copyrights. Most of them are my songs. This has caused me a great deal of trouble. I have to try to adjust the situation in each case by giving the correct copyright information and substantiating my claim."

Assigning His Catalog

Here on a leisurely tour of the Pacific area, Goldsen met with leading publishers and recording execs. He plans to assign his music to various Japanese pubs, according to their special fields of emphasis, with the George Thomas Folster office continuing to handle the bulk of his royalty collecting. Aside from Polynesian music, his rock 'n' roll to such standards as catalog includes all types, from "Dream," "Moonlight In Vermont" and "Tampico."

"I got an education in Tokyo," Goldsen observed. "I found that the music publishing business here is in its infancy, although in recording they are rolling along. You have to depend almost entirely on recording and performance royalties for your income. One of the problems is that the sales of sheet music are practically nil. The Japanese are not used to buying music, but with the increasing sales of instruments, the sheet music income will have to grow."

"Printing costs of music are excessively high here, higher than in the United States," Goldsen noted. "I have the feeling that it's a mechanical problem. In the U. S. we can print 16 pages at a time. Here the small presses need more runs. I think this is rertarding the publishing of music, but I'm sure the Japanese will lick it."

Tin Pan Valley

By RED O'DONNELL

Nashville, May 28.

Tex Ritter buzzed in to record a speech. That's right—a speech! It seems that when the Country Music Assn. recently presented a country and western show in New York for ad agency execs RCA Victor put it on tape for possible use as sales promo, souvenir, etc. However, Ritter's remarks came out garbled on the original so he hustled down to dub in his forensic bit.

Also at Victor studios: veteran actor-comic Stepin Fetchit cut a comedy album under supervision of a&r chief Chet Atkins, and backed by pianist Bill Pursell, drummer Morris Palmer and bass player Henry Strzelecki. Setting was a simulated nitery.

Dave Gardner through town en route to his home burg of Jackson, Tenn., where he got the keys to the city and the red carpet treatment from civic officials during a "Welcome Home" party.

John Wright, who plays Willy in the ABC teleseries, "McHale's Navy," vacationing hereabouts with wife Brenda (she's in the show's June 6 episode; her acting debut). John plans to join his mother and father, "Opry" artists Kitty Wells & Johnny Wright, on personal appearance through Canada this weekend. Heads back to Hollywood in July for resumption of series filming.

SHORT SHOTS—Robert Lunn cut a "Talking Blues Man" LP for Starday. Backed by Roy Acuff and Smoky Mt. Boys, with whom he toured for years . . . Ed Hamilton, ex-WENO deejay, named professional manager of Earl Barton Music's local branch. Succeeds Bob Tubert, who became Regent Music's operative in this area.

During President Kennedy's recent one-day stand here, official motorcade passed by home of songsmith Marijohn Wilkins, who wrote the 1962 BMI-award-winning ballad, "PT-109." She stood in her yard proudly holding placard which read, "The Home of PT-109," JFK smiled and waved a friendly hello.

June 9 will be Lester Flatt Day in Sparta, Tenn.

Cap Gets Sahl, Victor Inks Gary, UA Signs Isley Bros.; Other Deals

Mort Sahl, whose comedy disks have been on Verve and Reprise, will now cut for the Capitol label. Details of the comedian's first Cap recording plans are still to be worked out pending diskery prexy Alan W. Livingston's return to his Hollywood headquarters from New York. Sahl's artists & repertoire producer is also yet to be named.

RCA Victor: John Gary

John Gary, pop baritone, has been added to RCA Victor's artist roster. Victor plans to introduce the New Orleans singer on both singles and albums. His first sessions are scheduled for later this year.

United Artists: Isley Bros.

The Isley Bros. have swung over to United Artists Records from the Atlantic label. The Isleys (Ronald, Rudolph and O'Kelly) are currently clicking on Atlantic with "Your Old Lady." Their initial disk, produced by Bert Burns, will hit the market this week.

Columbia: Jordanaires

The Jordanaires have been added to Columbia Records' artists roster. The group's records will be produced by Don Law, Col's exec artists & repertoire producer in Nashville. For the past several years, The Jordanaires have provided background for such artists as Jim Reeves, Marty Robbins, Patti Page, Rick Nelson, and Tennessee Ernie Ford. The group, organized in 1948, consists of Gordon Stoker, Hoyt Hawkins, Neal Matthews and Ray Walker.

Mercury: Chad Mitchell Trio

Mercury Records has added the Chad Mitchell Trio to its stable of folk artists. The group, which opened yesterday (Tues.) at the Drake Hotel, Chicago, have skedded their first album for Merc for the fall.

The Mercury folk roster now also includes Josh White, The Smothers Bros., Inman & Ira, the Knob Lick Upper 10,000, Anita Carter, The Couriers, Ernie Sheldon and Joyce James, and Stu Ramsay.

Epic: Max Morath

Max Morath, tv entertainer, has been tagged by Epic Records. Morath currently is presenting "The Ragtime Era" over the facilities of the 60-station National Educational Television network. In addition, he has recently completed production of 15 new half-hour programs called "Turn of the Century." The series will be seen on NET later this year. For Epic, Morath will record an album under the supervision of Bob Morgan, exec producer.

Atlantic: New World Singers

The New World Singers, a folk-singing group, have been added to the Atlantic stable. The group, consisting of Gil Turner, Happy Traum and Bob Cohen, will record both singles and albums. They're set for a summer season stand (June 14-Sept. 2) at the Silver Jack near Grand Rapids, Mich. Their first single couples "Don't Think Twice, It's All Right" and "Stew Ball."

Smash: Keny Dino

Singer Kenny Dino has been signed by Smash Records, and his first single for the label, "I Wanna Know," will be released immediately. Deal was negotiated by Doug Moody, new Smash eastern a&r man.

Like: Larry & Conservatives

Edward Prindle, president of the indie Like label, has signed a new vocal group, Larry & The Conservatives. The group's first release, "Watch Your Step," is currently hitting the deejay circuit. The group is managed by James Johnson.

Harrah's, Lake Tahoe

Lake Tahoe, May 18.

Phil Harris, Lobato Dancers with Nelida (3), Jubilee Four, Kurt Anden's Poodles, Moro-Landis Singers and Dancers (17), Leighton Noble's Orch (15); presented by Bob Vincent; produced for Harrah's by Art Barkow.

Phil Harris in this Harrah's Tahoe debut is telling 'em what he likes about the South, and audience reaction is full assurance his appeal is not limited to the folks from south of the Mason-Dixon Line. This Harris package has something for everyone—the exciting Lobato Dancers, the cute antics of Kurt Anden's poodles, the rousing vocalistics of the Jubilee Four—but the accent is on Harris, his uptempo titles, his authentic southern charm. He uses it all to full advantage.

Playing on his historic show biz associations, Harris makes most of the likes of "Smoke That Cigaret," "Old Man Time," "Row, Row, Row," "Blow Gabriel," "Up a Lazy River," "Battle of Jericho," "Old Time Religion" and "Preacher and the Bear." His exit, natch, is "That's What I Like About the South."

Headliner is actually on for about 25 minutes, weaving himself in and out of the one-hour, 10-minute production, working with the combined Lobato and Moro-Landis (house line) dancers, the Jubilee Four, and introing (with clever material) Anden's poodles.

In tandem with the Jubilee group (who have worked many years with Harris) he scores heavily on the plus side with "Jericho" and "Old Time Religion," the latter done in revival-spirit manner.

Harris gets good results with his lines re boosing, wife Alice Faye, and some topical stuff. He proves his dramatic abilities on an impressive carbon of Bert Williams, one of the few really serious spots in the full turn.

The Lobato Dancers combine flashy choreography with the talents of the Moro-Landis singers and dancers in Latino numbers featuring the exquisitely proportioned Nelida. Eber Lobato is credited for choreographing his group's productions and also handles vocal and drum accompaniment.

Anden's poodles are paced through routines including one tripping across stage in impression of Brigitte Bardot; others jumping, walking under, and knocking down hurdles; climbing and balancing on ladder rig atop trainer's feet while he's positioned on his back. One pooch is showcased catching balls tossed to him atop pole balanced on Anden's forehead. It's an act perfect for many situations, and canines are highly responsive to commands.

The Leighton Noble Orch, with Buddy Cole directing from the piano-organ, works in its usual commendable style. Cole rates the adjectives for his prowess as arranger-conductor for the Harris package.

Robert Goulet due June 3.

Liborio, N. Y.

Miguelito Valdes, Candido, Roberto & Alicia, Alejandro Manzano, German Le Batard & Pancho Cardenas Orchs; $5 minimum.

Miguelito Valdes is no longer a frequent Broadway visitor, even though his pipes retain their original vigor and his stage deportment is lively and knowledgeable. He has returned to the Stem at the Liborio for a stint in a haunt that shows off his tunes before an appreciative audience of Latins.

Valdes, originally a singing trumpeter with the Xavier Cugat band, became a noted Afro-Cuban chanter when he went into business for himself. He virtually made a career out of his versions of "Babalu" and "Cumbachero" and these remain the keystone of his act today.

Valdes is still reminiscent of the days when he reigned supreme in the old La Conga. His catalog hasn't changed much. He takes an occasional recognition at the new rhythms from the warmer climes that have come into being since that time, but generally it's as though he never left the street.

At his opening at the Perez Blanco spot, there was a sprinkling of music publishers to applaud him as well as a heavy roster of rememberers. It's recalled that the popularity of such singers as Valdes helped establish the BMI catalog which had had a strong Latin lineup in its early days. He's still a potent entertainer as evidenced here.

Valdes is backgrounded by Candido who works at a set of bongo and conga drums. Candido has a solo spot in which, dressed as a voodooist, he shows extraordinary skill at the skins. He gets melody out of the drumheads as well as a beat and indicates that he's still one of the best of this species.

Roberto & Alicia, a vet flamenco team, also rouse the Latin spirits in the house. They work in two sections, first of which is devoted to traditional dances, and they stomp out a colorful pair in that genre. Latter part is made up of the modern tempi which they do with skill and showmanship.

Holdover guitarist Alejandro Manzano provides an applause winning solo. Music for show and dancing is by the German Le Batard orchestra with Pancho Cardenas filling the lulls.

Chi Chi, Palm Springs

Palm Springs, Cal., May 25.

Lou Holtz, Estelita, Dean Barlow, Bill Alexander Orch (5); $2 cover.

Appearing in a mainland cafe for the first time in 10 years, Lou Holtz tossed his tried and blue stories into the pit of the Chi Chi Starlite Room and came off okay.

He was handicapped by a bronchial cough and since there is no soothing syrup in his humor he was not helped in his convalescence by the performance. The crowd, however, ("I left more people than this in my hotel room") gave him encouragement and laughed hardest at his off-color cracks.

He came back to give an old fave, his imitation of Al Jolson singing "Rockabye, My Baby." He coughed some more and remarked, "Oh God, I'm dying." This, of course, is a show biz idiom. Then he tried "It All Depends On You," barked a few more times and waved himself offstage.

He is preceded by Estelita, a hot tamale in a white dress that fits her like a sausage skin. Sexy, vivacious, a black-haired beaut, with eyes that roll with the dice, she sings half a dozen songs, including her serious bit about the bullfighter.

Show opens with a hard working and deft hoofer named Dean Barlow. He runs the gamut and was well received.

Bill is in only for weekend, this being new policy of the Chi Chi. Dave Barry and Marie Wilson due in next. Joe Spata Trio fills in each week from Monday to Friday.

Mister Kelly's, Chi

Chicago, May 20.

Jackie Mason, Sally Jones, John Frigo Trio; $2.50 cover.

After three hot weeks with Shelley Berman, Mister Kelly's is keeping the momentum going with Jackie Mason. Two packed opening night shows attest to his draw here, although the presence in Chi of 6,000 free-spending restaurateurs at the National Restaurant Assn. convention obviously was a big help.

As a dialectician, Mason is first-rate and funny. He mines this vein of humor tastefully, but more than that he has a great ear for the absurd in everyday life and an easy, ingratiating and skillful way of articulating it. Most of his material is not particularly racial, but is viewed from the perspective of the defiant underdog, in this case Jewish.

By broadening his monolog past the narrow limits of parochial comedy Mason has firmly established himself as a comic with staying power. He would appear to mean it when he says: "Show business is like sex—when it's good, it's great; when it's not good, it's not so bad either." In his case, it's good.

This is Sally Jones' first time at this cafe, and she comes off as an attractive canary with an intriguingly aggressive jazz singing style. She has a sure feel for tempo, and her heavily-rhythmed song-alog provides a substantial workout for Rick Frigo (trio-leader John Frigo's son, the drummer).

If Miss Jones style has a slightly derivative cast to it, she also lends much of her own personal stamp to such tunes as "Hello Young Lovers," "Best Is Yet To Come" and "I'm Gonna Laugh You Out Of My Life." Barbra Streisand and Jackie Vernon open June 10.

Chateau Madrid, N.Y.

Serge & Sasha, Los Duendes Gitanos (4), Emilio Reyes Orch, Los Guaracheros; $5.50 minimum.

Angel Lopez couldn't muster his full entertainment strength on Wednesday (22) for the new show's opening at his Chateau Madrid because of immigration difficulties with the Watusi Troupe who were held up in Mexico due to some passport difficulty. As a result, the vocal team of Serge & Sasha were elevated to star status and Los Duendes Gitanos enlarged their offerings. It seemed all the show that the cafe needed for this occasion.

Serge & Sasha, Continental imports, have well-rounded voices and sing in a full-bodied romantic manner. Many of the Spanish offerings are reminiscent of Mexican troubadours and are pleasantly received. They also sing in French, Italian and have English inserts in some of their tunes. Although their songs are individually well-delivered, there seems to be a tendency toward uniformity and most of the numbers are sung with the same intensity. They are well-liked nonetheless.

Los Duendes Gitanos, from Argentina, are a firstrate flamenco team. Comprising Marga Soler and two male cohorts, Mario Nunez and Orlando Romero, with Pepe Alonzo as guitarist, the vigorous team has spirited routines and offers a good deal of excitement.

Miss Soler, who fronts in two numbers, shows an earthy singing voice combined with the bravura stomping. The lads chime in with hearty cleat work in a lively allegrias by which they generate enough excitement to bring vocal oles to the assemblage. The group works in two sections, and following the vocal-twain's appearance, come back with a stirring bulerias which wraps up the show.

The backstopping is by Emilio Reyes, with Los Guaracheros working the dance interludes.

Melody Room, L. A.

Los Angeles, May 24.

The Senators; two-drink minimum.

There was a period only a few years ago when steel bands burst onto the southland nitery scene, most of them billed as "The Original Trinidad Steel Band." The craze died out. However, The Senators, who made a local bow on Monday night (20) and don't even bill themselves as a steel band, much less the "originals," could bring back the trend. Group follows local stint with an indefinite run at Sahara Lounge, Vegas, and should prove a good lounge attraction.

There is little chance for individuality in music such groups can play. As steel bands go, the calypso rhythms and ringing island sounds of the Senators are fine. However, most identifiable tunes are those popularized some time ago and associated with other calypso artists. "Sloop John B.," "That's Right" and "Mathilda," for instance, are now standards.

Highlight of the act is "The Mighty Boomba," muscular dancer featured in the popular limbo and particularly adept in this difficult bar dance.

Booking is for two weeks.

Upstairs at Downstairs, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

The show at the Irving Haber hospice has been revamped with the exit of Anita Darien for other fields, and Ronny Graham, the extravaganza's producer, joined the lineup. Naturally, there were some deletions and additions in honor of this occasion. Graham leaped into the breach with a few strong pieces which he has been exhibiting around niteries here and there. They strengthened the show considerably.

This, incidentally, is one of the few intime cafe shows doing fairly well. Recently, the exit of revues at Cafe Society and Four West reduced the ranks of this type layout.

Graham is an accomplished zany who knows how to bring out the laughs with comparatively little effort. His rib of writers, his leadership in a skit whereby "The Connection" is done in the style of Mozart, and his love song in the manner of a march, are highlights. In addition, he participates in other skits to give the layout a strong focal point.

Another strongpoint is Bill McCutcheon, better known for his coffee commercials on tv. He has a naturally funny mode of expression and his participation in the various sketches accounts for a lot of laughs.

There also has been another change. Ann Fraser replaced Pat Stanley, and she does her work well. The rest of the cast comprises Mona Abboud, a little lass who does well in the comedy department, while Bob Kaliban and McLean Stevenson complete an attractive and hardworking cast. David Shire presides at the piano, and the musical staging by Lee Becker holds up.

The Downstairs Room has Mabel Mercer who has a considerable eastside following.

Tidelands, Houston

Houston, May 22.

Mark Russell, Cathy Johnson, Don Goldie Orch (4); $1.50 entertainment charge.

Mark Russell is a young comic who can't quite be compared with the Bruces, Sahls, Bermans or Leonards, yet there is some of each in his irreverent approach to life. He's somewhere between in and out, and his targets are such things as religion, integration, politicians, the Pentagon, television, and just about any random subject whose fancy he strikes.

Material is fresh and almost entirely his own, and parodies, done standup at 80s, are funny and sometimes as cutting as a boy with his first scout knife. Russell is on what may seem like an overlong 52 minutes, but none of the natives is restless.

Cathy Johnson is tiny and talented and a blond looker, and who can have more going for them? Thrush, an even 5 feet short, can belt, and proves it doing "Fly Me To The Moon" sans mike.

Auditors also highly approve "I Believe" and closing "He Taught Me How to Yodel," give top palming for such other tunes as "I Hear Music," a Jolson medley, and "I'm Little But I'm Loud." Her husband, Bob Monti, with electric guitar, aids backing and does solo, "Guitar Boogie." She is timed at 25 minutes.

Don Goldie Orch is good at backing chores. Show to play two frames. Bill already is showing good drawing power, as Russell has played here before, and boniface Bill Newkirk is certain to have both entertainers back again.

Barclay Hotel, Toronto

Toronto, May 21.

Deep River Boys (4), Starlet Dancers (5), Percy Curtis Orch (7); 1.50 cover.

Deep River Boys, with all arrangements by Ray Durant, their piano accompanist, stayed on for 46 minutes when caught and prove themselves top song salesmen. Harmony trio consists of Harry Douglass as lead baritone; Al Bishop, bass; Chuck Joyner a stenor, who unlimbers a trick falsetto. (Latter was with the Harry Belafonte group for several seasons).

All draw generous solo stepouts, notably Bishop in "I Can't Stop Loving You" and Joyner in "I Left My Heart in San Francisco." But it is their slow-time walkaround that gets the capacity customers on nostalgia, particularly witr vocalistics of "Apple Blossom Time," "Rambling Rose" and many requests.

Boys open with "Up the Lazy River," which gets off to a good start. They follow with "Mack the Knife," a bouncy "Dance, Everyone Dance," a comedy schoolboy version of "Charlie Brown" and a slow-time of "Mood River." They score heavily.

Edith Lazar's choreography adds immeasurably to Al Siegal's setup of the Oasis Room. Her five girls —recruited from Britain, Australia, Germany and Canada — open with a breezy, black-sequined production number and return later for a South American tempo. Percy Curtis Orch gives solid backing throughout, besides playing for the dance seshes.

Deep River Boys leave the Barclay June 1 for the Iroquois Hotel, London, Ontario; then plane to England to open June 30 in Liverpool followed by dates in London, Madrid, five weeks in the Scandinavian countries and an extended tour of Israel. They're due back in New York Nov. 1.

Edgewater Beach, Chi

Chicago, May 20.

Forrest Tucker with Marilyn Fisk, Edgewater Beach Guys (5) & Dolls (5), Don Davis Orch; $2-2.50 cover.

Forrest Tueker's new nitery turn (see New Acts) accounted for the first packed opening night house in many moons at the cavernous Polynesian Village, and his local popularity will no doubt account for a busy three frames despite the hotel's remoteness from the downtown play areas.

Producer Robert Simpson has mounted a sprightly medley of tunes and terps from "Music Man" for the Edgewater Beach Guys & Dolls as a prelude to the appearance of Tucker, who had a long run in the road company of the legituner in Chi. It is smartly costumed, crisply staged and withal rates as one of the more effectively breezy efforts of the resident revue troupe.

The Guys & Dolls are particularly engaging in their handling of such "Music Man" uptunes as "76 Trombones," a perky treatment of "Pick a Little," and a zestful handling of "Sh-Poopie." Soloist Lila Page scores vocally with a tender rendition of "Good Night My Someone," and the male contingent blends with her nicely in "Lida Rose."

The Don Davis orch backs the show capably and essays a bright beat between shows.

Isy's, Vancouver

Vancouver, B.C., May 23.

Earl Grant (with Bill Grant), Rudy Hayden, Bobby Hales Orch (13); $2.50 admission.

Back in Vancouver for his second stand, Earl Grant is again sending auditors into nightly orbit with his swinging showmanship. The house records he set last time around are going by the boards in this outing and the only crack in the mirror of bonifaces Isy and Richie Walters' unstinted appreciation is the dearth of comparable talent with which to follow an Earl Grant.

Grant is still the irresistible dean of decibels with his dynamic organ and piano combination backed by an augmented house orch of 13 pieces and it's not difficult to understand the reason why the crowd loves his uninhibited performance. He's at his artistic best, however, when he operates solo or with just his brother Bill Grant's drums in support.

But he paces his 60-minute session beautifully and offers sufficient of the quieter numbers to balance the big volume pieces that click so heavily with auditors. Since here last August, Grant has toured Europe and he draws on his continental appearances, to intro a flock of new tunes to supplement the old faves he reprises. With his whistling, vocals and Grant standards like "Ebb Tide", "Autumn Leaves" and "Moon River," he has something for everybody anc a little more besides.

Rudy Hayden has an okay magic routine and registers nicely in his brief opening turn. Bobby Hales' orch is solid in its backing and provides excellent rhythms for intermission terping.

Dino's L.A.

Los Angeles, May 24.

Bonnie Jacobs, Jack Elton and Steve LaFever; no cover, no minimum.

Bonnie Jacobs is just the kind of singer who fits the Dino's bill. She may not have the driving performance or outward, exciting delivery to suggest top commercial attraction, but there are sufficient qualities to indicate she will always be able to work in pleasant, small supper clubs almost anywhere.

Initially, singer is the "able-bodied" looker who adds the eye-appeal generally associated with warblers who work the room. She gowns well and has a classy look.

As a performer, Miss Jacobs works smoothly. Even a disturbing mike connection at Monday (20) opening left her looking, cool, unruffled and capable. Vocally, she has a light, pleasing quality that is well placed and sounds natural. She sticks to easy, controlled arrangements, particularly comes through nicely on soft ballads like "Moon River." She should prove a satisfactory attraction for the two week stand.

Jack Elton, piano, and Steve LaFever, bass, continue their adept musical backbone for singer and for refreshing inter-show music.

Summer Concert Field Hits New Peak With More Headliners Tenting Out

Talent offices are attempting to line up more summer concert series this year than ever before now that names are being lured by the high prices available on the outdoor shindigs. It's not infrequent for an act to get $10,000 plus an average of 60% for these dates. In some instances, the star has to provide the surrounding show while the promoter pays for the orchestra.

The latest to come into the summer fest field is Dennis Ritz who will produce the "Stars for a Summer Night" series to be held at the Red Wing Stadium, Rochester. The series will kick off June 14 with Steve Lawrence & Eydie Gorme. Next one-nighter will be topped by Bobby Darin, July 5, with Gordon & Sheila MacRae set to follow July 26. Connie Francis is down for Aug. 9 and Johnny Mathis concludes the series Aug. 31. The entire strip was booked by Ed Rubin of General Artists Corp.

The probing for festivals follows the booking of more of names into the summer theatres and tents. With additional headliners, promoters are being tempted to try for the tall coin with these festivals.

Even summer theatres, normally on a legit policy, have devoted entire weeks to variety shows. These theatres have been responsible for luring some of the headliners from poolside to try for the big bucks at a time when they would be laying off or taking sporadic dates. While on the road, the agencies have been able to get them to accept the one-night stands.

Integration Sparks Near Race Riot at Fla. Nitery; Blame White Youths

St. Petersburg, Fla., May 28.

Conflicting versions of a near race riot on its premises last Tues. night (20) are filtering out of the Peppermint Lounge nitery on nearby Madeira Beach, integrated last week by owner Dick Freeman and associate Miss Jody Myers.

Eleven white youths are accused by management of violently protesting its salt and pepper policy by throwing bar stools, breaking bottles and windows, giving a blackeye to owner and slapping Miss Myers. Warrants have been served four of the 11 with 18 separate charges. Freeman claims several hundred dollars' damage.

The lounge, which closed when the Twist craze subsided, reopened last week with all-Negro band and entertainers and announced plan of complete integration. Negro patrons were served in the bar Friday, Saturday and Sunday nights. But only band members were present at the time of the melee, according to Freeman.

He contends that he sought police protection before and during squabble; authorities claim no violence was in evidence when they were on premises and that their leaving was necessitated by another distress call.

Madeira Beach is midway in the chain of Holiday Isles off the St. Pete shoreline, a white stronghold where even domestic servants have always departed before dark.

NEWKIRK IN MIDDLE ON AGVA-BOOKER DISPUTE

Chicago, May 28.

Singer Bob Newkirk, caught in a franchise dispute between vet Chi booker Al Dvorin and the American Guild of Variety Artists, was served here with a summons and complaint alleging breach of contract.

Dvorin contends that Newkirk canceled a club date in Oklahoma on June 15 "without due cause." Associated Booking Corp., which handles Newkirk, argues that the date was canceled because Dvorin has been put on the AGVA "unfair" list.

Dispute started, according to Dvorin, when following a personal wrangle between the booker and AGVA branch manager Alton Sharp, Dvorin was requested to pay a $1,000 franchise fee. Dvorin said that payment of the fee was "observed only in the breach" and in his case was a "penalty for bucking Sharp."

Hub's 'New Look' Getting Exposure in Cafe Revue

Boston, May 28.

Buddy Thomas is casting a new revue here to be called "New Look," comprising 20 singers and dancers, depicting Hub's new honors as "All American City." Thomas, who choreographs the shows and has the line at the Frolic, Revere, said sets are being built with mockups of the new Prudential Center 55-story bldg., the new Government Center and other new developments in the city's rebuilding program.

A 10-girl chorus line will be fronted by beauty contest winners picked from each section of the city, where new construction is underway with the current Miss Massachusetts appearing in the show. A theme song on the new Boston look kick is being composed for the revue, which will have its breakin at the Frolic.

Bright & Penny Bury Legal Ax

Los Angeles, May 28.

Suits and countersuits brought against each other by Jackie Bright, former administrative secretary of American Guild of Variety Artists, and Penny Singleton, past prexy of AGVA, have been withdrawn by the two principals.

Bright, in defamation of character suits, had asked $1,200,000 in general and special damages and $1,000,000 exemplary and punitive damages in Federal Court, totaling $2,200,000. Both these suits were filed in May, 1960, in the form of amended complaints.

Miss Singleton in October, 1960 filed a cross-complaint in Federal Court for same amount of $2,200,000 in special and punitive damages.

Delayed Rusty Warren Date Already a Sellout At Chateau Club, Cleve.

Cleveland, May 28.

Rusty Warren is fulfilling her long-postponed engagement at Chateau Club June 10-15 and the date is already a sellout.

Comedienne agreed, according to reports, to play for the same salary that her original Chateau contract called for last autumn. At that time the room also sold all tables in advance.

When her father died a couple of days before her scheduled opening, Miss Warren pleaded with club's owner to postpone the engagement so she could attend the funeral.

Nick Pinardo, who owned Chateau then, willingly okayed her request with the tacit understanding that she would fulfill her contract at a later date.

Steve Hollo and Adolph Tucky, who recently bought the deluxe spot from Pinardo, are following his policy of buying high budgeted names for one-week stands. Management is getting a break on salaries of headliners by permitting them to double on Mike Douglas' KYW-TV daily afternoon programs.

This kind of deal has worked out profitably for all parties involved, particularly in pyramiding publicity for their nitery appearances. Cover charges ranging from $1.50 to $3 are calculated to nearly cover salaries of the acts under new setup.

Hollo and Tucky recently leased adjoining store, chopped down wall and converted space into a raised Gallery Room that gives the Chateau a 325-seating capacity.

Margaret Whiting is current. She will be followed by Red Buttons June 6-8, then Dagmar for one week. Room's calendar also includes Top-Notchers, June 17-22; Don Cherry, week of June 24; Enzo Stuarti, July 8-13; Jerry Van Dyke, July 15-20, and Modernaires, July 29 through Aug. 3.

Gene Autry Diversifies Into Hotels—Preems His Continental in H'wood

Hollywood, May 28.

"I have been around hotels so many years and I know so many hotel people that I don't feel like I am a stranger in the business," Gene Autry remarked as he opened his new $6,000,000 Hotel Continental Thursday (23) on the Sunset Strip.

Explaining his interest in such diversified entities as radio and television stations, baseball teams, ranches — and now, hotels — cowboy star hazarded, "I guess I'm one of those Democrats who's a little late in exploring new frontiers."

Hostelry, operated by the Gene Autry Hotel Co., is held on a long-term lease from Saul Pick's Sunset Properties and adds 300 rooms to the mushrooming Sunset Strip, which is seeing a building wave. It will aim for class trade and small conventions but won't seek permanent guests, although luxurious suites undoubtedly will entice some.

Dedication ceremonies included everything from ribbon-cutting by June Allyson, short speeches by former California Governor Goodwin K. Knight, District attorney William McKesson and others to baptism of a rooftop swimming pool by two Can-Can girls. Press was hosted same night, with celeb crowd following eve.

House staff is headed by veepee and general manager Don B. Burger, exec assistant manager Robert R. Harthun, assistant mgr. Arthur E. Steel and exec chef Merman Flechenstein.

Birmingham Bias Moves Gregory To Grim Humor

San Francisco, May 28.

Comedian Dick Gregory managed to make even embattled Birmingham sound funny—in a grim sort of way—in a press conference that preceded his opening at the hungry i here.

The Negro comedian, who went South to join Freedom Walking Negroes in the Alabama city, was arrested for parading without a permit almost as soon as he set foot on Alabama soil. He spent four days in the Birmingham jail.

"The first day that jail food tastes just like garbage," he said, "and the second day it tastes just like garbage. But on the third day it's just like home cookin'." As reporters roared, he aded: "And on the fourth day you ask for the recipe."

It wasn't so funny, he said, when he stepped out of a line-up and was jumped by five guards. "I thought of the saying (of the late President Roosevelt) 'We have nothing to fear but fear itself.' But fear was runnin' about fourth that day."

He was squeezed, with 500 other Negroes, into a "bullpen" meant for 50 prisoners. "I called it wall-to-wall us."

Gregory had words of praise for the Birmingham Negroes spearheading the fight for civil rights there. "We Northern Negroes knew we were on the bottom of the totem pole, but we always figured the Alabama Negroes were below us on it. But they are fighting my fight down there, breaking down barriers for me and my family."

WELK'S 50G G'RANTEE VS. 65% AT L.A. FAIR

Hollywood, May 28.

Lawrence Welk troupe has been booked for Oct. 18-19-20 at Shreveport (Louisiana State) Fair on deal providing $50,000 guarantee against 65% of the gross. To spell Welk at the Palladium here for the Friday-Saturday nights he will be playing Dixie, his manager Sam J. Lutz is booking in Wayne King's band.

The "Waltz King" is bringing his troupe west for the first time in several decades for a Shriners booking at their aud here Oct. 11-12 and King himself will do a solo guesting on Welk's Oct. 12 ABC-TV show.

McClellan's AGVA Probe May Spur Extension of Withholding Tax to Acts

The entire structure of salary payments in the variety field may change as a direct result of pressures arising from the McClellan Committee hearings on the affairs of the American Guild of Variety Artists. It's trade-believed that legislation is in the works to deduct withholding tax and social security payments from the salary checks of all actors. Presently, it's done only in the case of chorus employees in cafes and elsewhere.

The legislation being studied is designed to get around the maze of court opinions which have variously held that most acts operating in the variety area are independent contractors, rather than employees. After the withholding tax was initiated, AGVA obtained a ruling from the Government, which while not conceding that acts are indie contractors, stipulated that for the purposes of the tax collections they are to be construed as independent contractors. Thus most variety entertainers have never had withholding stipends deducted from their paychecks.

Proposed legislation is designed to bring all talent into the withholding purview. This would also mean that the tax on one-nighter earnings would also be deducted by the various organizations or partygivers. The Government would derive, reportedly, considerably more revenue in this manner.

Most cafes would have little extra clerical work to do inasmuch as they already deduct from chorus girls, waiters, barkeeps and other employees. The new deductions would, however, have more effect on clubdate producers, some of whom do not now have the setup to take out the taxes.

Failure to deduct withholding taxes and social security from variety performers were among the items in the AGVA setup that particularly irked Sen. John McClellan (D.-Ark.), the committee's head. He was angry with the union for not forcing those hiring the acts to take out the Government levies. But its indicated that proposed legislation will virtually guarantee that collections will begin. Laws to that effect would also justify the committee's aim to provide corrective legislation in a field which it investigates.

Currently, the variety field is one of the few remaining areas in which there are no social security and withholding deductions. Variety employers have long contended that they exercise only token control over an act. They have contended that an act brings in his own material, costumes, music, props etc. and the employer doesn't tell him what to say, sing or dance and therefore exercises no control. Control is essential in determining whether a performer is an employee or an independent contractor. Thus far, most court decisions have held them to be indies. However, new legislation could change this interpretation.

Minn. Fair Sets Names For 2d Successive Yr.

St. Paul, May 28.

Name headliners for its grandstand night show for the first time proved such an attendance stimulus during its 1962 exposition that the 10-day Minnesota State Fair, Aug. 24-Sept. 2, will again book top talent.

Previously, the fair, which always draws in excess of 1,000,000 payees, relied entirely on the Barnes & Carruthers No. 1 touring unit, sans names. The impending fair will have Buster Keaton as one of the night grandstand show's headliners for the entire 10 days. There'll also be Rosemary Clooney for the first five days and the Smothers Bros. for the latter five.

Last year's night grandstand show was topped separately by Jimmy Dean, Jane Russell and Dennis Day.

GAC in Merger Talks With ITA

Hollywood, May 28.

A deal for the takeover of International Talent Associates by General Artists Corp. has been initiated, but nothing definite is set. Attorney for ITA stated that GAC had approached ITA on the possibility of making some kind of alignment, whether through merger or sale, but he stressed that talks were only preliminary, and have not gone beyond that.

ITA, formed several years ago, books college dates and one-nighters primarily. Org is headed by Bert Block and Larry Bennett. They have been expanding into other fields of late.

GAC, on the other hand, has been interested in strengthening the concert facet of its business. Consequently, it sought to absorb an office established in this field. GAC, said to be the third largest talent agency, has also been expanding at a rapid rate, having taken on considerable personnel from MCA when latter retired from the agency business last July.

Previous acquisitions by GAC include its takeover of the Baum-Newborn Agency, Preminger-Stuart Agency, and the Ernie Young Office which handled outdoor accounts.

'Golden Strings' Tuning Biz for Mpls. Flame Rm. After Losses on Names

Minneapolis, May 28.

Hotel Radisson's Flame Room here, Twin Cities' plushiest supper club, which discontinued name acts and even, for a while, floor shows entirely, after years of such operation in the face of heavy losses, seems permanently back in the entertainment groove.

It has hit upon a comparatively inexpensive show employing local talent entirely and proving profitable. Room has gone in for what's titled "Golden Strings" and these have turned the profit trick for it. Shows' cast comprise only eight violinists and one pianist — all males.

These musicians parade among the tablesitters and also contrib diverting side business on a stage. Layout is under the direction of local producer Al Sheehan.

The format has been drawing so well and going over so big that, for the first time in years, the room will remain open through the summer with this entertainment. The flourishing trade comes at a time when many niteries are wailing about declining biz, blamed largely on new income tax expense regulations.

Most of the shows' violinists are recruited from the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. The layouts' comparatively low budget call for only a $1.50 cover weekends and $1 other evenings compared to the $2.50 which formerly prevailed when name acts were booked.

Vegas T'bird Chorines Doubling at $325 Wkly. Via Special Equity Pact

Hollywood, May 28.

Actors Equity Assn. has set a special chorus contract with Thunderbird Hotel, Las Vegas, and producer Monte Proser, under which 20-member chorus will be paid $325 a week to double in productions of "High Button Shoes" and "Anything Goes," which Proser will open Sept. 6 at the club back-to-back.

Paul Godkin will direct and choreograph shows, with Nat Brandwynn orch backing and sets by Glen Holse. Dick Shawn, Connie Russell, Elaine Dunn and Pete Marshall will be principals in each production.

Unusual contract, covering 14 performances a week, is up from normal Equity $235 weekly minimum. Minimum for eight performances a week in Vegas is $150.

Godkin said two shows are in for six months to a year booking, with experimental policy to be continued indefinitely if it proves successful.

Comic DeLyon's 3 Nights in Tokyo's Copa or How Do You Amuse an Orgy

Tokyo, May 28.

It seemed like three years, but it was really only three nights that comic Leo DeLyon played this city's Copa last week. He regretfully proved what almost everybody knew—that a talking comedian, especially one working in a foreign language, should not attempt to play a Japanese nightclub.

Bristling from his gruelling experience, the Yank cancelled himself out of the three nights he was booked for the New Latin Quarter after the Copa.

The problem at the Copa, according to DeLyon, was not so much from trying to hurdle the language barrier as from the difficulty in wresting the patron's attentions from the hostesses—the semi-pro hired dates who populate the clubs and are the backbone of Japan's nitery action.

"I'm not knocking the hostesses, but they're a tremendous obstacle for a comic," said DeLyon.

"I opened my first show thinking I was performing in a civilized club," explained DeLyon. "I started doing my act and nothing happened. I flipped out of my mind. Then I started belting insults about the club and its policy. I heard isolated shrieks and played to them."

Raps Yank Customers

One of DeLyon's observations from the stage was, "I've entertained in clubs all over the world, but to entertain an orgy is very difficult." He belabored some American bizmen sitting ringside with their hostesses, telling them that at home they probably attend church, Rotary meetings and are maybe even scoutmasters.

"But in Tokyo it's flipout time," DeLyon proclaimed. He also cast verbal barbs at the grim-faced members of the Japanese band behind him. He referred to the situation as an "Oriental Buchenwald."

DeLyon got enough screams in response to his dialog to observe, "So, they understand English."

But it wasn't what he wanted. "You can't do a hip show over here by any means," he noted. Although those who understood DeLyon were impressed with his performances, he was less than pleased.

"I went over, but not in a way that I was proud," he said. "I would have been ashamed if a professional from show business was in the audience. But I had to work that way in order to survive or my blood would have been all over the stage. It was like trying to entertain locomotives."

After escaping from the Copa, DeLyon did a show at the Tachikawa NCO Club near here. Using his new material, he opened with 15 minutes about his punishment at the downtown club. The GIs responded with appreciation.

"They were as good for me as I was for them," DeLyon said. "I needed them badly. I had to have my faith restored in whatever ability I may have."

Played Walker Hill

Prior to playing Tokyo, DeLyon shared the bill for two weeks with songstress Susan Barrett at South Korea's plush, new Walker Hill resort outside Seoul.

"There," DeLyon said, "there definitely was a language barrier. But at least it wasn't the noise. During the week for some reason the audiences were heavily Korean, although I thought they were only supposed to be admitted as guests. Yet they paid attention. They appreciated the visual and sound things I do."

While DeLyon praised the accommodations, food and service at Walker Hill, he was lacking in enthusiasm about the top management. "They don't know how to run the place," he said.

DeLyon confirmed reports that Walker Hill is becoming primarily a weekend biz. He pointed out that it is far from town and that GIs not staying at the resort have to leave early to beat the midnight curfew. "But I would like to see them make it," he added, "just for the sake of having a new and exciting place on the map for show people and tourists."

DeLyon these days does a lot of voices for the Hanna-Barbera cartoons, preferring to work around Los Angeles, where he lives with his family. Tokyo's Copa does not figure in DeLyon's future. "Not unless they want me to toss salads," he said.

Fairs Chill on TV Cowboys Riding Up Without Act

Failure to organize an act is forcing some of the top tv cowboys out of the lucrative fair business. Many who last year picked up considerable change on the outdoorers are unable to get more than one or two stands this season for the simple reason that they can't sing, dance, ride or rope. They have little to communicate with the grandstands and it's been a disheartening experience for all concerned.

The talent agents who have been pursuing bookings in the outdoor areas lament the fact that genuine cowboys who do all these items, aren't being built into names these days. It's the good actors who get top assignments in the teleseries, and justifiably so inasmuch as the tv audience is the first consideration of producers.

Most of the fairs that bought the tele thesps are no longer doing so. It's pointed out that James Arness, the resolute and hardhitting hero of "Gunsmoke," is not a good enough rider for display purposes. In his act on the fairgrounds, he made his entrance in a Cadillac convertible. Agents and fair owners had to skip over many acts in Arness' category, since they couldn't show another turn with little to offer two years in a row.

As a result, most agencies have gone back to pushing names. They're harder to get and require much more money, but all seem happier when talent is on display and not just another rugged face.

Los Angeles, May 28.

Cocoanut Grove, which had firmed Robert Goulet for a two-week stand beginning June 18, asked singer to extend his sked from the eight shows per week their pact stipulates and has been turned down.

Jack Lauerman, Grove director, wanted baritone to do two shows nightly (presently he's set for two on Friday-Saturday, one on other nights, save Monday when nitery is closed) and reportedly offered to split the covers on the added shows. Freddie Fields, who books Goulet, relayed the offer and reported back with the nix.

Goulet, certainly the hottest new attraction in niteries, originally was set for three Grove weeks. He asked out on one and got it with proviso that he would play spot another two weeks within 12 months of coming date, for which he is booked on flat fee.

Grove reports over two-thirds reservations have gone already for Goulet. Over last 18 months top draws at Grove have been Lena Horne, Eddie Fisher and Sammy Davis Jr., in that order.

N.Y. Coffee House Talent Showcase Bows June 6

A new coffee house utilizing talent is slated to preem in New York June 6. It's tagged The Howff, after an Edinburgh theatre restaurant. Initial bill comprises Martha Schlamme, who will do "The World of Kurt Weill" twice nightly with Abraham Stockman at the piano.

The Howff will have an admission charge of $2 and $3. Attempts will be made to sell memberships at $10 entitling card holder to 25% discount, and a $100 membership giving bearer two free ducats to each show and 50% slice in menu tariffs.

Benefits as Talent Booby-Trap

New York.

Editor, VARIETY:

Just as a warning to other ignorant artists, I'd like to describe my contribution to the destruction of my good name at Carnegie Hall Sunday afternoon.

I was asked by the Guild for the Blind to MC the afternoon portion of their "Musicthon" at Carnegie. Being an entertainer, and consequently agreeable to all unreasonable demands on my time and charitable instincts, I promised to attend.

I was told that all the artists were being arranged for and that the program would be in the best of taste.. The names of some fine performers who had already accepted were furnished me. When I called again to make final arrangements, some new names were added—also very impressive.

But when the day came around I began to worry about the publicity. I was told that large organizations, such as unions, had subscribed for most of the tickets. In other words, although there would be no audience, the charity would benefit, nevertheless.

Well, there was a small audience. I am grateful for that benefice, for the program was execrable. Only a few recognized performers appeared, the program was filled with young people of some talent, but of little audience appeal. And I had to act as buffer for the rightful anger of those "non-union" members of the audience.

As usual, the promoters had made loose agreements with the entertainers to appear, "unless commercial commitments interfered." Commercial commitments interfered. And I was left clinging to the mast as the good ship Fiasco sank slowly in the west.

As I sink for the third time, let me cry out a warning to all who agree to particlpate in benefits . . . DON'T!

Bruce Norris Cattle Co. Revamping Fla. 'Fish Bowl' Into Top Tourist Lure

By ODIE ANDERSON

Homosassa Springs, Fla., May 28.

A sizeable chunk of the Bruce Norris cattle millions has been earmarked for redevelopment and expansion of the firm's recently acquired Florida west coast tourist attraction, Nature's Giant Fish Bowl. The 120-acre compound was bought by the Norris Cattle Co. following a traffic count which revealed a 4,040 car-a-day vehicle flow, twice the number at Marineland at Miami and equal to Silver Springs on U. S. 40.

Since the initial transaction, the company has been buying surrounding land at such a clip that the project's overall size changes from day to day. The entire operation is eventually expected to encompass 20,000 acres.

Riding a wave crest which has propelled the west coast of Florida into speculation prominence, the Norris company is a far-flung financial kingdom covering almost every phase of industry. It has retained top architects and engineers to design the layout and numerous structures to be erercted.

The main attraction, the huge natural fish bowl, where fish of many species congregate in the crystal clear water, will be reached by boat—novel Seminole Indian war canoe-type crafts, through a waterway of man-made canals, landscaped with foliage native to the area or bordered with jungle-like undergrowth.

A large underwater room for observation of fish in the bowl will be constructed, along with an elevated observation deck over the underwater facility. Added will be an extensive complex of tanks to house the unusual in fresh water marine life. A dolphin and additional aqua mammals now being acquired will be trained to perform.

Already well populated is the alligator pen. The company's aviary will be brought from Black Swan Park at McIntosh in north Marion County, Fla. and established in facilities which will enable visitors to observe practically every known water fowl from around the world.

The tourist-resort complex will include an air strip and golf course. Toward the gulf, a hunting strip will be open to guests, where the Tiger Tail Lodge will be erected, along with the Bounty, an elaborate restaurant in the immediate vicinity.

On the site of the main attraction a second restaurant will be built, with gift shops, offices, boat docks and souvenir shops, all adjoining a huge parking facility directly on the highway. It's reported that show biz names will appear periodically.

G. A. Furguson is general manager of the Norris firm. William B. (Bill Blue) Ray has been named general manager, to coordinate plans for the vast entertainment area. For 11 years Ray was public relations director for Silver Springs, owned jointly by his family and the late Col. W. M. (Shorty) Davidson prior to its purchase last fall by ABC-Paramount Theatres.

1st Annual Variety Show Featuring Blind Talent Nabs Good L.A. Reaction

Los Angeles, May 28.

First in what is planned as an annual variety show featuring blind entertainers, the four-act vaude bill put on at the Wilshire Ebell Theatre Saturday (18) by Blind Entertainers Productions got good public response, demonstrated by good-sized audience, sold via telephone solicitation, and 38-page program, of which 34 pages were ads taken by personalities, indie pix companies, financial houses, etc. All acts were AGVA and/or Musicians Union members, and were paid scale.

Program ranged from very good to only fair, with bill tied together by its one sighted act, comic team Enright & D'Amore. Enright also doubled as emcee. Team is young, zestful and with better material could compete with top teams. Enright handles his emcee duties with proper amount of "range" in stories and intros.

Best on bill was Negro pianist Howlett Smith, backed by bass-player Bill Hadnott, whose numbers varied from his own "Little Altar Boy" to a top "West Side Story" medley. Singer Rex Randell, well schooled in gestures and demeanor, could have used equally good advice on numbers as he pushes his voice beyond its natural range.

Guitarist-pianist Jimmy Pruett, with big boost from drummer Pee Wee Adams and Hadnott, doubling from backing Smith, almost went under with an over-amplified, rock 'n roll guitar solo on "Guitar Boogie," but, switching to piano, recaptured his audience easily.

Show wound with semi-dramatic skit by actress Marcia Blakesley who held audience more by her extremely pretty looks and personality than by the material she was given. Miss Blakesley, who gives no impression of being blind, could work, with good planning, with sighted actors in a regular routine. However, audience gave her heavy mitting which should encourage her to keep trying.

In all, performers were completely at ease while "on," only nervousness displayed was by assistants in getting them on and off stage, and with large assist from Enright & D'Amore, this was kept to minimum. Producer Melvin Covello, who worked similar shows in Norfolk and Philly last fall, hope to expand production as annual event. General admission was $2. Robe.

Lease Lyman's, H'wood, For Theatre-Cafe Spot

Hollywood, May 28.

James Terry has leased the former Mike Lyman's restaurant building on Vine street and budgeted $50,000 to open a two-theatre-restaurant-nitery complex.

Terry has set a June 25 opening for The New Club, which he tags spot, featuring a 175-seat "Grand Guignol Theatre" and a 125-seat cabaret concert room to feature new talent.

First shows to be staged will be Ronald Sands' "A Day With Henry" and "An Actor Prepares." Productions will run with Equity casts, admission to be at $1-$1.50. Terry plans 14 shows weekly on six-night basis, with two weekend matinees. He will produce all theatrical offerings.

Producer, aiming for youth market, has set a non-alcoholic policy for club.

Indie Agents Farewell Coast-Bound Ingalls At Nostalgic N.Y. Luncheon

The ranks of the independent agents are thinning. Of late, it seems that everytime the indies get together it's at a funeral. This trend was reversed Monday (27) when about 80 attended a farewell luncheon at Steuben's Restaurant, N.Y., for Miles Ingalls, who left yesterday (Tues.) on a leisurely motor trip to the Coast, where he will join the Johnny Dugan Agency.

Ingalls has been an indie for many years, many of them in partnership with Joe Flaum, who was one of the prime movers in the shindig. Most of those attending are long out of independent ranks. Most were with the major offices and many were completely out of the business, some now in personal management ranks, others in unrelated fields. From the looks of the luncheon, the independent agent has been widely scattered over the years.

Yet they haven't lost their capacity for having fun together. It seemed like an open forum, everyone who had a recollection of some business with Ingalls got up and spoke, some in a four-letter idiom. The only half-way serious item on the agenda was a contemplated raffle of Ingalls' address book, said to be one of the most reliable in the business.

Even Dugan, from his California office joined in the fun. His telegram to the luncheon was a high-spot. It stated that all the talk about Ingalls joining his organization was a mistake. He hoped it hadn't inconvenienced him.

Nenetheless, Ingalls has given up his office which was formerly occupied by Loew Theater booker Sidney Piermont and his successor Jesse Kaye. He packed many of his records in a pair of suitcases gifted to him by the agents, and took off for the Coast with his wife.

Many of Ingalls' acts were taken over by Bernard Burke & Max Roth. Others that can work on a wider territorial range were taken into the new association by Ingalls.

The luncheon was emceed by Eddie Elkort, president of Artists Representatives Assn. Jose.

Seven-Up to Use Acts At Its N.Y Fair Pavilion

The Seven-Up Pavilion at the New York World's Fair opening next April in Flushing, N. Y., will have live entertainment on four circular stages, according to plans projected by the soft-drink firm. The talent will be booked by John Krimsky, operator of the Stroller's Theatre Club, N. Y., who was director of entertainment during the 1939 N. Y. World's Fair.

Blueprints call for four 15-ft. stages embodied in fountain pools placed at four strategic viewing areas. When the fountains are turned off, the stages are ready for the performers. The Pavilion has been designed by Becker & Becker Associates.

CARTER JOINS CMA

Ending a long association with the William Morris Agency, Jack Carter has joined the Creative Management Associates in all fields.

The Durgom-Katz office continues to be Carter's personal managers.

George Chasin Exits MCA

Hollywood, May 28.

George Chasin, senior veepee-board member of MCA Artists Ltd., resigned yesterday (Mon.) after 17 years with firm. All indications point he'll return to talent agency field, having been approached by number of talent agencies regarding affiliating with them.

While at MCA was head of motion picture, literary and theatre departments.

Philly Ct. Again Padlocks Lil Reis' Celebrity Club; City Calls It a Nuisance

Philadelphia, May 28.

The Celebrity Room, midtown cafe owned by Lillian Reis, former chorine and key figure in the alleged $475,000 Pottsville heist, was padlocked again by court order—just 24 hours after it had reopened on the decision of another judge.

An injunction was obtained by Dist. Atty. James C. Crumlish Jr., and in addition to the previous charges on which the city has been trying to close the Celebrity Room as a "nuisance," the D.A. added two charges both allegedly committed at the gala reopening Thursday evening (23).

Crumlish said his county detectives observed entertainers mingling with guests and that alcoholic beverages were sold to visibly intoxicated persons.

The club had been closed since April 17 on a temporary injunction granted to the City Solicitor. The court later held, however, that the City Solicitor was the improper official to ask for the injunction and threw out the case.

When Miss Reis relighted after this decision, the D.A. got into the act. A hearing as to whether the new injunction can be made permanent will be held today (Tuesday) in Common Pleas Court.

When informed of the latest developments, Miss Reis said: "I guess I'll go on unemployment compensation."

Minn. to Kick in $150,000 For Exhibit at N.Y. Fair

St. Paul, May 28.

The state legislature has passed and the governor signed a bill providing for appropriation of $150,000 of state funds for the Minnesota exhibit at the upcoming New York World's Fair. The balance required, $1,450,000, is expected to be forthcoming from the state's business interests. A North Star World's Fair Corp. is raising it.

Previously passed in the lower house, the bill had a 52 to 2 senate vote in its favor. Originally, however, $325,000 had been sought from the state.

Names

names and surrounding acts. Just how they'll divide the top names for niteries and video is still to be solved.

The agencies say that, in the long run, it will be up to the performers and their personal and business managers to decide how they'll allocate their working year. Some acts will elect not to play any more than three shows out of the roster, even if offered more, because of the quick erosion of material on video.

Others will take as many tv shots as they can get since they will limit nitery appearances to Las Vegas, New York, Miami Beach and Hollywood. In any case, the agencies figure that most niteries will have a rougher time in getting sufficient acts to meet their needs.

The talent offices also fear that a price competition will result from the extensive bidding. Budgets will be higher in the cafes because of this situation.

Many bonifaces prefer that the acts they play shun frequent tv appearances. It's felt that they expose too much material on each of their teleshots, and give away too much of themselves to retain their freshness for niteries. The agencies agree, to some extent, but indicate that they'll have less control over the headliners' activities because of the stiffer competition between vaudeo and cafes.

St. Petersburg (Fla.) Bistros Cop Decision On Battle of the Bottle Clubs

St. Petersburg, Fla., May 28.

Battle of the bottle clubs is being won in this section of Florida by the bistros, due to foggy laws governing establishments which deal in alcoholic beverages. Three such late, late spots in Pinellas County continue to flourish despite padlock efforts of the police.

Attorney Eli S. Jenkins has represented the clubs (where members store liquor and are sold set-ups or food only) in a long series of temporary closings, injunctions to restrain officials and ultimate reopenings.

Jenkins contends that a 1953 special act setting a two a.m. curfew for niteries dealing in alcoholic drinks does not apply to the clubs, since they sell no liquor and therefore are not required to buy licenses. Special act is an appendage to the law governing issuance of liquor licenses.

Emerging unscathed in his brush with the fuzz is Clarence Perry, operator of Benoit's, a bottle club-restaurant at nearby Indian Rocks Beach South Shore. Perry, arrested Feb. 4 for operating after hours, was freed on $250 bond.

Jenkins filed his usual petition for injunctions against police interference with his operation, and last Tuesday (14) the prosecutor decided against further prosecution, since an injunction is still in effect.

In the case of the downtown Two Bit Club, owner-operator W. H. "Tiny" Sylvia paid a $150 fine following the second of two raids. The business was closed but Jenkins obtained a greenlight for its reopening. Third of the trio, The Clan at Maderia Beach, continues outwardly peaceful, after scratching music which neighbors found objectionable.

Cocoanut Grove, L.A.

Los Angeles, May 23.

Johnny Mathis, Freddy Martin Orch (16), Allyn Ferguson's Rhythmic Strings (13), Jack Feirman; $3 cover, $3.50 weekends.

Since first he skyrocketed out of San Francisco eight years ago, Johnny Mathis has proved potent b.o. in L.A. and, on the basis of the near-capacity turnout for his Tuesday (21) opening there appears little if any lustre off his lure. More than 800 were encamped and although there was a large party of 60 (awash with Hollywood celebs — probably all guests of Mathis and/or management), the number of payees was impressive.

In fact, it was the best Grove opening in many moons, topping even that of preceding Nat Cole. One unusual touch was presence of 40 disk jocks and wives — with their tabs picked up jointly by the Grove, Columbia Records and Mathis' manager, Helen Noga. This deal was set up several days before it was learned that Mathis leaves Col label (for which he always has cut) when pact ends July 5 and swings over to Mercury. However, Col isn't grumbling; it still has a host of Mathis vinyl to vend.

In a 50-minute turn, Mathis has command all the way, relying primarily on his disclicks such as "Chances Are," "Wonderful, Wonderful," "Not For Me To Say" and "Misty." It might be observed that top reception was accorded his pair from "West Side Story" — "Maria" and "Somewhere," — to "Love, Look Away" and that Blue Ridge ballad, "Every Step of The Way."

His phrasing is satisfactorily crisp and he rides the melodies with perception, pinching fewer notes than often is his wont. Giving every indication of being able to really bend blue notes, the wonder grows why Mathis doesn't and thus broaden his repertoire.

His lower register punctuations (as on "Every Step" and "Stairway to Paradise") are vivid; and he could use more such material. The big poser, probably, is why doesn't he include a genuine, rousing spiritual?

He demonstrates he has following aplenty via vaporizing vocals on vinyl ("Chances Are" and "Not For Me To Say"), but he also demonstrates he hasn't fully plumbed his potential.

Freddy Martin's orch (16) is back after a winter in Florida — very welcome back and with this booking the Grove inaugurates constant 'tween shows dance music by adding Allyn Ferguson's Rhythmic (13) at other end of the room, with new dancefloor built there.

Ferguson's sound is rather unusual — six fiddles, viol, cello, harp, piano, guitar, bass, percussion. An effective contrast to Martin's well-brassed band, stunt should prove a click and Ferguson's grouping could catch on. It might be noted that till eight months ago Ferguson was conductor for Mathis, but gave up the road work to settle here with family. Jack Feirman is now batonning for the singer.

For the Mathis' turn, Martin's crew is swelled to 22 by addition of key strings from Ferguson's combo, and the backstopping is rather awesome. In all, so is the show from the Martin overture of Irving Berlin evergreens to Mathis' last, lingering note. Was.

Second City, Chi

May 25.

"20,000 Frozen Grenadiers" (or "There's Been A Terrible Accident at the Factory"); produced by Bernie Sahlins; directed by Del Close with Paul Sills; music composed and performed by William Mathieu; with Jack Burns, Dennis Cunningham, Ann Elder, Sally Hart, Dick Schaal, Avery Schreiber, and Omar Shapli; $2 admission weeknights, $2.50 weekends.

"20,000 Frozen Grenadiers" marks the debut of Del Close as director of the Second City home troupe, and he has come forth with a generally sparkling potpourri of high-spirited and occasionally pointed skits. It also marks the emergence of Dick Schaal as a performer in the tradition of the fountainhead company that produced Shelley Berman and Mike Nichols & Elaine May and of whom much more is bound to be heard.

Of the current cast, only Schaal, Avery Schreiber and Jack Burnes are holdover, and it is largely their show. Omar Shapli, Dennis Cunningham, Ann Elder and Sally Hart all show promise for the Second City format and each contributes at least a few bright spots to the revue.

The material is a mixed bag, both in terms of comedic and/or satiric approach and power to sustain attention. However, it is Schaal's engaging talent that derives the most from the best sketches and pulls the weaker ones to greater heights.

His artfully clumsy portrayal of an awkardly amorous beau bringing a date home is touchingly comic, and his improvisational romp with Schreiber in "Transformations" is a sheer delight on both their parts. (Together the pair have a Laurel & Hardy quality that is irresistible.)

It is Schreiber and Schaal again who light up a takeoff on a school for scoundrels, with the portly and mustachioed Schreiber as the eternal patsy and Schaal an eager apprentice con man. Jack Burns notches a few poignant moments in a repeat of a skit about a lonely conventioner that was in the last show, and does an effectively high-pitched takeoff on a glory-shouting Oral Roberts-type faith healer.

Special mention goes to pianist-composer Bill Mathieu's masterfully scored and staged parody of modern opera a la Menotti. Like the comic ballet in the preceding show, it is brilliant in its verisimilitude to and satire of contemporary high art. Mor.

Roaring 20s, S.D.

San Diego, May 24.

Kay Starr, Johnny Adamo band (12); $2 admission.

In an era when every teenager with a guitar, or a friend with him, is palmed off as a singer, Kay Starr comes off as the consummate professional in every detail. She drew a large opening night audience and, as expected, delivered the goods for boniface Art Hirsch.

White-garbed, dark-haired singer looks great as she demonstrates her highly individual way with a song. Among vocal highlights are "Wrap Your Troubles in Dreams," an easy swinging "Lonesome Road," "Old Rockin' Chair," a tribute to Mildred Bailey, plus such record hits as "Side by Side" and the inevitable "Wheel of Fortune."

On two numbers Stanley Singers provide background. To her credit, Miss Starr leaves audience wanting more after a well-timed songalog. Johnny Adamo's house band does okay in showbacking and for dancers. Don.

French Qtr., Houston

Houston, May 24.

Jaye P. Morgan, Don Cannon Orch (9); $2 entertainment charge.

Booked in for a week with options, Jaye P. Morgan will stay an extra frame at the French Quarter, an inevitable move by boniface Larry Grayson since the ropes have consistently been up since the singer opened.

Blond and effervescent thrush has pipes like a trumpet, and she seldom strays from the standards. She gets noticeable assist from husband Artie Kane who directs the Don Cannon orch and handles 88s.

This booking marks emergence of French Quarter Club, in the Continental Houston Hotel, into the major nitery classification, joining the Shamrock Hilton's International Club, Tidelands Club and Cork Club as clubs using top entertainment. The French Quarter is a beautiful club, and has only needed proper if cautious bookings to place it in the Big Four.

Don Cannon's Orch, certainly one of best in area, has been beefed up to nine instruments (from six) for this engagement. As usual, it proves it's a band of note. Skip.

Smaller Theatres To Be in Vienna Fest

Vienna, May 28.

In competition with the regular theatres, several smaller houses will contribute to the forthcoming Vienna Festival Weeks (May 18 to June 16) with new plays.

The Tribune will stage the play, "General Kisch," by the Linz (Upper Austrian) author Karl Wiesinger. The Theatre Courage will produce "Jeder von uns" (Everyone in our Midst) by the Austrian author Denis F. Bernhardt.

The Losers, L. A.

Los Angeles, May 18.

Matt & Ginny Dennis, Lenny Stack Trio; two-drink minimum.

Matt Dennis, a favorite pianostool pigeon in these parts for lo these many years, has recently come out from behind the Steinway to team with his warbling wife, Ginny. The results are on display for a three-week span at this La Cienega bistro.

While the act is not especially high-powered or galvanic, it is slick and engaging. The novelty of the Mr. and Mrs. aspect, plus the seasoned vocal skills of the performers, makes it a handy attraction for clubs such as this.

Matt and Ginny take turns in the solo spotlight when not exhibiting their wares in unison. Both have polished voices and can maneuver their way smoothly through the intricacies of a refrain, be it ballad, showtune or up-tempo. The mermaid-gowned Mrs. Dennis solos effectively on such numbers as "The More I See You" and "Sweetest Sounds."

A slight hoarseness marred some of Dennis' generally dulcet tones on this occasion, but he has the savvy to minimize the danger zones. His best work occurs when he returns to the 88, where he seems understandably more at home, and renders a medley of the noteworthy compositions he has created over the years.

As a team, the matching silver-tressed couple generate an extra sparkle, romping vivaciously through such numbers as "Thou Swell," "We Belong Together" and "Let's Get Away From It All."

Behind all this togetherness lurks the Lenny Stack Trio with tip-top accompaniment. Tube.

Duvernay, Hull, P.Q.

Hull, May 23.

Denyse Ange, Brian Brown Trio; $1 cover.

When Denyse Ange was New Acted several years ago at the Chaudiere Club here, she lacked (review said) showmanship savvy and act construction. Miss Ange has not only added plenty of both but considerable skill and staging as well to bring her stint to top rating.

Canary manages to sparkle, control and be a svelte gamin throughout in a solid stanza that collects consistently heavy mitting. She exhibits ability to handle a string of tunes ranging from "I Enjoy Being A Girl" to the Irma La Douce opener, "Milieu", as though they were penned for her.

In the Hotel Duvernay's posh Executive Penthouse, Miss Ange sells every word with top skill and savvy, and proves conclusively that her strongest work is done in intimeries of this type.

After a run through several Intercontinental Hotel rooms in the Latin lands, she comes to the EP with one of the strongest sessions the room has hooked. She's there until June 8. Zabethe Wild comes in June 10. House combo, Brian Brown Trio, showbacks and provides socko jazz for dancing and listening. Gorm.

Ash Grove, L. A.

Itamar, Grecco & Willard, Jonathan Zak; $2 admission, no minimum.

Los Angeles, May 22.

Current bill, departing considerably from "country singers" with whom spot has become more or less identified, drew small but attentive audience for Tuesday's (21) opener. Combination of Itamar, 25-year-old singer from Israel, and comedy team of Greco & Willard provides contrast, with both acts worthwhile, but not likely to draw same crowds, much less the regular rounders.

Itamar, who looks amazingly like Eddie Fisher, is an accomplished folk singer whose tenor voice projects with considerable feeling. Until American audiences become more familiar with Israeli and Yemenite folk tunes, however, he'd do well to offer an occasional number in English, which he speaks with an attractive accent.

Most lyrics are of love song from ballads to semi-martial airs. High spot is "Sing Me A Song," due to an amazing self-accompaniment on a small drum, from which he gets both bass and snare effects with just his fingers. Although most selections are sung a capella, Itamer gets solid support, when needed, from pianist Jonathan Zak.

Grecco & Willard, who've been seen on Steve Allen show, offer series of vignettes with considerable range in style, and effect. Humor is surprisingly clean for a nitery turn. Best efforts art a deaf salesman applying for job with hearing-aid company; a pantomime bit about two burglars; and interview with a Steve Reeves-type film star.

Program is in through June 9. Robe.

Reno Upbeat

Primadonna (located directly opposite Harolds) for the first time will introduce shows this summer. His room, seating an estimated 350, is located on the second floor of a new annex to his club. Primm reports no definite headliners inked yet, but notes the show will feature a line of 16 femmes.

Golden Hotel Rebuilding

The Golden Hotel, destroyed in April, '62, by fire, is now rebuilding and the Tomerlin Bros. are shooting for a July 1 opening of the casino area only. The theatre restaurant, with Barry Ashton producing the shows, is scheduled for late July preem. Spot will also have a large lounge separate from the theatre-restaurant.

The Riverside, shuttered since last December for financial reasons, is now being remodeled in the interior, but no show policy has been announced. It is set for a late June reopening.

At the Nugget in Sparks (three miles east of Reno) the headliners include Gordon MacRae (current), Dave Barry, Peter Lind Hayes & Mary Healy, Patti Page, Sergio Franchi, George Burns, Frankie Laine, Milton Berle, John Raitt, Sophie Tucker and the Andrews Sisters. Last summer Nugget owner John Ascuaga used live acts in a temporary lounge, but has made no decision to repeat the policy this season.

At Lake Tahoe's South Shore, Harrah's has contracted for the South Shore Room such names as Robert Goulet, Lawrence Welk, Danny Thomas, Sammy Davis Jr., Dinah Shore and Mitzi Gaynor. Lounge acts will include Louis Prima, Harry James, Billy Eckstine, Woody Herman, Mary Kaye Trio and the Kim Sisters.

At the Wagon Wheel, where entertainment is offered in three rooms, Harvey Gross has booked such acts as Esquivel & His Orch, Shecky Greene, Red Norvo with Mavia Rivers, Gaylord & Holiday, Lucky Starr, Characters, Town Pipers, Jo Ann Jordan Trio, Louis Jordan, King's IV, and the Gallions and Ginny.

Sinatra's Bookings

On the North Shore of the lake, Frank Sinatra will topline Vince Edwards, Joey Bishop, Vic Damone, McGuire Sisters, Keely Smith, Tony Bennett, Ella Fitzgerald, Dean Martin, Gordon & Sheila MacRae. He'll also use acts in the club's lounge.

The Nevada Lodge, opening a new theatre-restaurant seating 400 in late June, will bring in an edition of Frederic Apcar's "Vive Les Girls." And it's been suggested if "Girls" proves okay b.o. it'll be in for a long run. Lounge acts will alternate with the three nightly showings of the Apcar production.

The Crystal Bay Club has on the line the Novelites, Frank Fanelli, Vagabonds, Lancers, King's IV, Andrini Bros., Sawyer Sisters, and Jack Schafer. Firmed bookings for the North Shore Club include Lloyd Lindroth, Ginny & the Gallions, Murray Arnold, International Four, and the Bobby Page Show.

The North Shore Club and the Cal-Neva Lodge operates only on a seasonal basis—from Memorial Day to Labor Day. Other Tahoe clubs are open year-round.

With nature's cooperation—via the weather—the Reno-Sparks-Lake Tahoe area experienced better than normal casino business during the winter. And there's much optimism among the gamblers that this summer will set a record for tourist visits to the area.

Wolf Joins Cooper Ag'cy

Jay Wolf has joined the Frank Cooper Agency to work in its personal appearance depts. He had been with the Milton Goldman Agency, which was absorbed into the Ashley-Steiner Agency some years ago.

The Cooper office, previously concentrating in tv and literati sectors, has been expanding into other fields in recent months.

Bimbo's 365, S. F.

San Francisco, May 20.

"Continental Revue," starring Caroline Richter, Gino Baldi, Bobby Winters, Liett Chorlton; $2 cover, $2.50 Sat.-Sun.

All comediennes should look like Caroline Richter, and they should all be as funny. The Houston gal who heads the current Bimbo's bill gets her kicks (and her audience joins in) by poking gentle but pointed fun at the cornpone-and-crinolines image of the Deep South.

She's at her best when doing this and when explaining a lexicon of Southern words ("abode" — "that's a long wooden plank"). But her humor doesn't depend entirely on the hushpuppy trade, as she finds comedy in modern everyday life. She has a top-rate singing voice, too.

Miss Richter's turn is sandwiched into one of the most sumptous shows Bimbo's has seen in some time, with three production numbers, each outdoing the previous one. The opener, "Rhapsody in Pink"; the midpoint number, "Up in a Penthouse" (San Francisco scene) and the final "Cleopatra," all feature the sexy, satirical dancing of Liett Chorlton, who shakes a wicked leg (etc.) indeed.

Costumes by Lambert of Hollywood, choreography by Rene de Haven (a Bimbo's veteran) and music by Dean Elliott contribute strongly to the production numbers.

Gino Baldi, a North Beach boy who grew up in Italy and is at home in four or five languages, sings pop songs with a fine tenor voice but no great excitement. He's handsome, though, and his easy stage presence may carry him along.

Bobby Winters, a juggler who satirizes his difficult art to perfection, rounds out the bill. Este.

Gatinean, Ottawa

Ottawa, May 21.

Larry Wilde, Lynne Christie, Russ Thomas Orch (5); Cliff Tripp in lounge; $2 admission.

Boniface Joe Saxe has a neatly balanced bill in his Gatineau Club nitery, with Larry Wilde collecting guffaws and Lynn Christie pertly chirping. Wilde is a solid performer, picking up topical items, even customers, and working them into laughs.

With NATO meeting here this week, he has a load of items to work with. But his big bit night last Monday (20) was a male tablesitter who refused to look at the stage. Wilde is never offensive, always witty, never blue.

Chanting stints display clicko pipes which should get more use in the stanza. Miss Christie has a skein of fine tunes backed by nice arrangements which she sells to the limit. Not really needing a microphone in the 400-seat Gatineau Club, canary exhibits ability to belt, croon or handle anything between.

Her upbeat items had the customers mitting in rhythm, and her ballads kept them silent until mitting-time when they responded plenty. Backing show is the five-man Russ Thomas house band. Cliff Tripp 88s in the Blue Lounge.

Show is in to May 29. Myron Cohen opens May 30. Gorm.

Skyroom, Tucson

Tucson, Ariz., May 22.

David Allen; Lou Garno Quartet; no cover, no minimum.

The cliche, a "singer's singer," has been overused and at times not rightfully bestowed. But, if any pop singer really deserves the appellation it is David Allen, who made his Skyroom debut a noteworthy one. Possessed with a natural talent in his warm, in-tune voice, the goodlooking vocalist is a perfectionist, packaging his pipes with beautiful phrasing and breath control.

Allen opens show sans spotlight and introduction to "Only Have Eyes for You." Although primarily a ballad singer, his up tunes are handled expertly, backed by hip arrangements. Control is best showcased in his slow numbers, such as "Days of Wine and Roses" and "Moon River."

Business is slack, but mitting by auditors present opening night would be noisy in a full room. Backing is handled adeptly by Lou Garno Quartet.

Allen closes June 1. Alex.

New Acts

FORREST TUCKER WITH MARILYN FISK
Songs, Dances, Comedy
50 Mins.
Edgewater Beach, Chi.

Forrest Tucker wisely chose to launch his new nitery act in Chicago, where he amassed a host of followers as the lead in the road company of "Music Man" during a 40-week stay a couple of years ago. It was Tucker's singular prowess on the benefit and interview circuit that is given credit for the legituner's long run despite unenthusiastic opening reviews.

Too, the Chi setting should provide him with an opportunity to sharpen the turn in friendly surroundings. At present, it is an uneven, at times ragged, show that has promise but lacks pace and structure. It strikes sparks in Tucker's hoof duos with his diminutive spouse, Marilyn Fisk.

There's a charming contrast between the high-pocketed Tucker and cute, pint-size Miss Fisk as they winningly terp their way through "Walking My Baby Back Home" and "Dancing In The Dark." Audience response would seem to warrant more of the pair in tahdem.

Surprisingly, despite Tucker's stage musical experience, his warbling falls short due to frequent low-voltage projection and fuzzy articulation, with the exception of a rousing "Trouble" opener.

His solos on "When You're Smiling" and "Everybody's Doing It" lack the punch to sustain interest, and he is more successful in such novelty tunes as a maudlin rendering of "Father of the Bride" and a generally clever parody of "Blues In The Night" called "Aunt Sophie."

Tucker's storytelling ranges from mildly tickling adult club-car anecdotes to moderately-blue lodge-night stories. It's a narrow range and he affords it more time than it warrants.

In sum, Tucker has the basis of a strong nitery act, but it will take considerable editing and more appropriate song selection to realize its potential. He has a fine song-&-dance-man image, and when he capitalizes on this essence the show moves spiritedly. Mor.

JOYCE THOMPSON
Songs
25 Mins.
Rendezvous Room, L.A.

Wife of a Hollywood correspondent for Life mag, canary is emerging from semi-retirement for stint as nitery singer. She has the verve and voice to make it but her bubbling personality, which seeks to involve listeners, would be more effective on a musical comedy stage (whence came she, via Texas) than in the cooler, detached atmosphere of niteries.

A petite blond with beaucoup sparkle, Miss Thompson is in need of good advice on costume and coiffure. The beehive hairdo is most unbecoming and the long gloves bit just isn't for her.

Her material, especially a hatbox routine a la Jane Morgan, is good but could be better when some adjustments have been made. The hats don't always fit numbers, all of which are show tunes.

Purely unintentional, opening night nerves gave her rendition of "Where Is Love?" from "Oliver" the slightly shaky, piping note it needed. Nerves are temporary, considering most of Coast staff of Life mag was in audience for opener. Robe.

CHUCK DODDS
Songs
30 Mins.
Rendezvous Room, L.A.

A tall, blond type, who resembles both Richard Chamberlain and Troy Donahue a bit, Chuck Dodds is on the threshold of big time discovery. Previous exposure as member of one of Statler-Hilton's revues earlier this year has provided needed polish and assurance.

Easily the best male singer to have played BevHilton's talent showcase, his combination of clean-cut good looks, solid personality and strong, vibrant voice should send him far. He's equally at home with a rousing rondo or limpid love song.

Although in for spot's usual one week with options, Dodds is sure to be held, plus being brought back for future dates, a policy the spot is adopting. Robe.

BRIAN HYLAND
Songs
20 Mins.
International, N.Y.

Young rock disker Brian Hyland is, in his present playing condition, more an example of electronic wizardry than live performance. Now appearing at Jack Silverman's International as part of the "Prom Time U.S.A." show, he will doubtless be a lure for the teen disk-listening, transistor-toting set but fails to deliver conclusively in person.

Hyland's act needs considerable strengthening in the area of communication with his audience. He presents an amazingly introverted show for a rock 'n' roller and has trouble holding an audience because of it. He needs to loosen up and project more strongly to sell his rock better and presumably will develop as he spends more time before an adoring crowd of teen femmes. He looks the part and, with greater confidence and verve, could become a solid performer in his genre.

Far better on the uptempo material than with ballads, Hyland essays "Old Cottonfields Back Home" and a medley of his r&r clicks with rocking precision. His "All the Way" ballad and treatment of "Moon River," sung while perched atop a stool strumming a guitar, prove weaker items for the singer. He uses the guitar on various occasions during his turn but, inasmuch as it is an unamplified model and in that he doesn't play it too well, this instrument proves an ineffectual tool at present.

Hyland is a personable looking lad who sells lotsa wax for ABC-Paramount Records. More of his disk personality needs to be translated to the stage for him to score conclusively in person. Time and experience could develop these skills. Kali.

GENE PITNEY
Songs
25 Mins.
International, N.Y.

Headlining the current "Prom Time U.S.A." show at Jack Silverman's International, N.Y., is Gene Pitney, a singer who, although a teen hearthrob via his United Artists pop diskings, shows promise of moving into a more adult attraction groove. Suffering from a touch of laryngitis on night caught, he nonetheless projected a savvy and polish that generally overcame the cracking.

Pitney puts his material over with appealing salesmanship and has a clear, high-register voice that projects well. He displays unruffled savvy, even in the face of his vocal difficulties. He also keeps a smooth, brief line of patter going between tunes which nicely bridges the gaps and holds the audience all the way. His vocal style works equally well in both the ballad and uptempo grooves.

Whether warbling standards like "Little Man You Had a Busy Day" or "The House I Live In" or essaying his pop clicks like "Town Without Pity," "Only Love Can Break A Heart," "The Man Who Shot Liberty Valance" and most recent "Mecca," Pitney delivers with knowhow. He builds his tunes to dramatic peaks and constantly keeps the crowd with him by playing to them directly instead of singing to himself as so many tyros seem to do.

Although Pitney's current act is built mostly for teen consumption, the singer shows strong indications of being able to move easily into the broader adult audience realm because he is in no way limited to a rock songalog. The transition could be made with few changes, save in the material. Kali.

MARY MEADE FRENCH
Songs
30 Mins.
Ye Little Club, Bev. Hills, Cal.

Mary Meade French returns to the nitery boards after a four year absence with an act closely associated with the work she has done in the past. Primarily known as a society or intimate club singer, she retains this style. Its greatest appeal lies in the quiet, posh dining spots.

Singer's stint is designed in a format more popular a decade ago. There is the special material "opening song" and most tunes are light, romantic standards—"Tenderly," "Kick Out of You," "Sometimes I'm Happy," "Lost in His Arms." They suit her well-disciplined, light but nicely-developed voice.

Newer "Heart in San Francisco" has Miss French ill at ease only time of the set, but two French numbers — "Autumn Leaves" and "Pigalle" — add to the chanteuse quality she projects. Her pro background and polish particularly show on good bit using a hand mirror to spot individuals in audience, with special lyrics directed to them on "Little Boy to Love." Dale.

House Review

Palladium, London

London, May 24.

Leslie A. Macdonnell & Bernard Delfont presentation of "Swinging Along", a revue in two acts (16 scenes). Directed and staged by Robert Nesbitt; decor, Tod Kingman; costumes, R. St. John Roper; ballet, Walter Gore; musical numbers staged by Ross Taylor; orchestrations, Burt Rhodes, Ralph Dollimore, Billy Ternent. With Arthur Haynes, Susan Maughan, Frank Ifield, Ken Morris & Joan Savage, Rudy Cardenas, Nicholas Parsons, Leslie Noyes, Line (20), Walter Gore Ballet Group (10), Bob Wallis & his Storeyville Jazzmen, Billy Ternent Orch.

The established team of Robert Nesbitt, who staged and devised the new Palladium summer show; Tod Kingman, the chap who dressed up the stage, and R. St. John Roper, who dreamed up the costumes, has turned out another confection from its assembly line that is virtually the same as any other Palladium summer show but with a different title and performers.

On the first night there was an air of laxness which no doubt by now has been put right. In any case the old formula will undoubtedly serve and the show will satisfy undemanding customers who visit London in coaches. It will surely run until the management decides to replace it either with a short season of vaude or with pantomime.

Decor and costumes are as bright and glittering as ever, though Nesbitt's hand on the helm seems a shade wobbly. He has brought out the best in the material at hand. However, the nagging question is whether the material is as good as it used to be. Main problem is a distinct shortness on comedy.

Titular star, tv's Arthur Haynes, gets limited opportunity to create the yocks and he is also the worst, but not the only sinner in ad libbing mainly for the benefit of his fellow artists.

In his own act, Haynes puts over a few blueish gags and makes a few other appearances that do little to enhance his reputation. He is solidly stooged by Leslie Noyes.

Best moments of so-so entertainment come from individual acts. Susan Maughan is a new young thrush who is obviously inexperienced and a shade breathy in her warbling. But she is cute and should make the grade with hard work.

Her main contribution is a medley (backed by some boy terpers) which all hinge on her affection for various young men (cue for songs like "Jim" and what have you) leading up to the inevitable plug for her own big disk, "Bobby's Girl." She leans heavily on the use of a hand mike.

Frank Ifield is a personable young man whose gimmick is a fondness for the yodel and he certainly gets the teenagers whooping it up in the aisles. Other act that rightly rates heavy palm walloping is Rudy Cardenas, a remarkably agile and smooth juggler.

Ken Morris, with his wife Joan Savage, scores in a double song-and comedy act and also chips in effectively in other items. Nicholas Parsons, Dorothy Dampier and Bob Wallis and his Storeyville Jazzmen are also pleasantly on hand when required. The Bill Shepherd Singers, Ross Taylor's dancers and, notably, the Walter Gore Ballet Group add a sizeable quota to a show which never fully gets off the ground, yet is fairly amusing.

Of the production numbers, the liveliest are the first act finale which spotlights New Orleans jazz, and "Stage Struck," a John Taylor scene which features Joan Savage and gives her an opportunity of impersonating the voices of two or three top songstresses. Rich.

See Legit Booming in Twin Cities, Spotlighted by New Guthrie Rep; Touring Shows Getting Hefty B.O.

Minneapolis, May 23.

The recent opening of the Tyrone Guthrie Theatre, coming on top of the recent healthy grosses registered by touring shows here and in St. Paul recently highlight a comeback for legit in the Twin Cities after the doldrums of several years ago. A significant element in the situation is the growth of secondary local theatres, both summer and year-around.

The legit stage in the Twin Cities reached a low several years ago when the old Lyceum Theatre, long the Minneapolis base for the Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscription season, was unable to keep afloat with the sparse bookings of touring shows, and was sold to a religious group for use as a tabernacle. With no other adequate local house available, the TG-ATS setup was shifted to nearby St. Paul Auditorium, thereby expanding it from a split-week stage to a full-week engagement.

Since then, the Orpheum, a large-capacity film house in Minneapolis, was made available for touring legit, and the TG-ATS established subscriptions in both cities, with full-week bookings in each. Moreover, the subscription lists in both Minneapolis and St. Paul are among the biggest the TG-ATS has anywhere, and grosses in both places have become substantial assets to touring productions.

It's figured that the TG-ATS setup and the Guthrie Theatre's repertory operation will not be in competition but will, in affect, be mutually helpful. The same situation is believed to apply in the case of the various local stock groups. The Guthrie project, in particular, appears to be stimulating public interest in legit as a whole, and promoting increased theatregoing in the general Twin Cities area.

The principal local outfits are the Minneapolis Old Log, the Edyth Bush repertory in St. Paul, the Univ. of Minnesota Theatre and its Showboat, and the Theatre in the Round in Minneapolis. In addition, of course, are the various one-night show biz bookings under a subscription setup at the Univ. of Minnesota.

Vancouver Fest Opens Sked of 7 Productions In 60 Performance Run

Vancouver, May 28.

Four openings on consecutive nights, starting tomorrow (Wed.), will launch sixth annual Vancouver International Festival. The opener is Verdi's opera, "Macbeth," with Irene Dalis and Frank Guarrera, conducted by Fausto Cleva, Dino Yannopoulos and designed by Wolfgang Roth. Thursday night (30) will bring the vintage musical, "Floradora," with Maria Cleva and Fran Dowie, as adapted by Mavor Moore from the original 1899 production at the Lyric Theatre, London, and designed by Michael Johnson.

"Saint Joan" is due Friday (31), with Susan Kohner and Mike Nichols starred, and direction-design by the Yannopoulos-Roth team. Saturday (1) brings "The Best of Spring Thaw," a selection of numbers from former editions of Toronto's annual satirical revue. Produced and directed by Mavor Moore, it will feature Dave Broadfoot, Roma Hearn, Dean Regan, Karl Norman, John Wright and Shirley Milliner, with musical numbers staged by Alan Lund and design by Johnston.

Other Festival productions will include "Peter Pan," due June 4, with Heath Lamberts, Ronald Bishop and Gwen Franks, directed by John Hirsch, designed by Aristides Gazetas; the comic opera "Merry Wives of Windsor" opening June 10, starring Jan Rubes, conducted by Martin Rich, staged by Herman Geiger-Torel and designed by John Wilson, and Oscar Wilde's "The Importance of Being Earnest" arriving June 17, directed by Mike Nichols and designed by Roth.

The seven productions will play

Schedule 3 Star Bills For Mineola Playhouse

Carol Channing in "The Millionairess," Walter Pidgeon in "Lord Pengo" and Sam Levene in "Seidman and Son," will be among the shows during the summer season starting June 11 at the Mineola (N.Y.) Playhouse.

Genevieve in "Irma La Douce" is current at the Long Island stock spot.

Erl (W. Germany) Sets 'Passion Play'

Erl, W. Germany, May 21.

This village with 1,000 inhabitants is going to do its own "Passion Play" this summer, with 25 performances slated between the June 16 opening and the September 29 closing date. Villagers have been doing the Passion Play for the last 350 years, with recent performances in 1959, 1960 and 1961.

The town had planned a 300-year celebration in 1933, but the hall where the play is presented burned down. The hall was rebuilt and ready for the 1959 performance. So this year there will be a special 350-year celebration. The 1961 event attracted 60,000 visitors, mainly from Germany and Austria.

Director and Judas player Johann Schwaighofer is touring through England and Ireland this month to attract interest in the play, and Andreas Habicher, who plays Peter, is doing a similar publicity tour in Germany. Jesus will be played by 24-year-old law student Kaspar Pfisterer, and 23-year-old Anneliese Schreder will be Mary Magdalene.

MINNESOTA SPONSORS SEE RED ON MET OP

Minneapolis, May 28.

Various circles hereabouts have been set to wondering if there's a limit to the amount of cultural entertainment that this area can or will support simultaneously.

This is because New York's Metropolitan Opera came here this time immediately after the bow of the attention-commanding debut of the new Tyrone Guthrie Theatre which offers the drama classics in topdrawer fashion. And what happened was that the Metropolitan Opera left its first local deficit.

The opera company has been playing the 4,800-seat Northrop Auditorium here annually for the past 20 years.

Gross for the recent May 14-19 seven-performance engagement here was $244,000, but, as huge as this may seem, local sponsors found themselves nearly $10,000 in the red. Because there's always the guarantee the Met, of course, was nothing out. And it's indicated, too, that the guarantors will not have to dig into their pockets inasmuch as the deficit can be met out of a reserve fund which they've built up.

What might have been factors making for the deficit, in addition to the Guthrie Theatre competish and limelight grabbing, is the fact that there were seven performances this time—one more than ever before—and the top was upped from $10 to $12, it's pointed out.

Despite this year's loss the local guaranteeing group will continue to bring back the Metropolitan Opera next season and every year thereafter when it's available, according to announcement.

Driver to Stage Bard

Washington, May 28.

Don Driver will direct "Much Ado About Nothing" for the third Shakespeare Summer Festival at the outdoor Sylvan Theatre in the Washington Monument grounds here.

The play is set for July 13-Aug. 11.

'Man Who Let It Rain' To Cost $32,000 for London

"The Man Who Let It Rain," Marc Brandel's dramatization of his novel, "Rain Before Seven," is budgeted at $32,000 for a pre-Broadway tryout in London.

Geoffrey F. Rudaw, who has the play under option, intends producing it on the West End in association with William Donaldson for Jack Waller Ltd.

Growing Concern Over Production Plans on 'Deputy'

With the news that New York theatre owner-producer Billy Rose has obtained the U.S. rights to the current German dramatic hit, "Der Stellvertreter" ("The Deputy") for Broadway presentation, possibly next season, is arousing concern among various religious groups, not only Roman Catholic. The Rolf Hochhuth drama, presenting the thesis that the late Pope Pius XII failed to exert maximum influence in behalf of the Jews during the Nazi regime in Germany, is considered by some observers as being anti-Catholic.

"Church World News," a weekly radio series presented by the Lutheran Church in America, in cooperation with the National Council of Churches, included in last Sunday's (26) broadcast a report on the subject by commentator Dick Sutcliff, noted that the play's author is a Protestant and that Catholic and some Protestant sources had termed the work "a triumph of bigotry" and an example of "the tendency of Germans to hold somebody else responsible for their actions."

Hochhuth himself has reportedly denied that the piece is anti-Catholic. Meanwhile, the widespread controversy about the play, internationally as well as in Germany, has spurred attendance for the Berlin production. Various New York managements reputedly were bidding for the rights, but Rose won out. The drama is also for London production, with Peter Hall as stager.

Various church authorities in the U.S. and elsewhere have become concerned at what they regard as anti-Catholic bigotry aroused by "The Deputy," and efforts are being made in several different directions to combat it. As a random example, Joseph Lichten, director of the intercultural affairs department of the B'nai B'rith's Anti-Defamation League in New York, was in St. Paul last week in an effort "to strengthen Jewish-Catholic relations."

He met with representatives of several Catholic colleges, schools and organizations, and in an interview asserted that Pope Pius made great efforts in behalf of the Jews during the Hitler reign, having been personally instrumental in "organizing action to help Jewish victims of Nazism and Fascism during World War II.

"Pius XII's humanitarian efforts to ease the lot of the Jews continued throughout the war," the B'nai B'rith official declared. "French, Dutch and Ukrainian bishops acted on behalf of the Jews on instructions from the Pope. Their success or failure was determined, to a large extent, by the degree of cooperation received from local populations."

Who's for Superstition?

New York

Editor, VARIETY:

For a reference work on the theatre that I am editing for publication in the fall, I would appreciate very much hearing from those who know of theatre superstitions and their origins. Am particularly interested in those of general tradition (whistling in dressing rooms, etc.) and those involving famous persons, families or groups (the Barrymore apple, for instance).

Also, can anyone shed light on the origin and subsequent history of the "Gypsy Cape," the rituals, the recipients, etc.? My addqress is c/o James Heineman, 80 East 42 St.

League of N.Y. Theatres in Huddle With Times Over 'Anti-B'way' Slant; Protest Follows 'Disaster' Story

By HOBE MORRISON

Is the N.Y. Times anti-Broadway? Some, if not most, of the leading Broadway producers believe so.

The situation, which has been simmering for many months, came to a head with the publication by the Times last Friday (24) of a Page One story, by-lined by Milton Esterow but apparently representing the combined efforts of the paper's large drama staff, calling the 1962-63 Broadway season the "most disastrous in memory" and asserting that it will involve a loss of $5,574,944 to investors.

The League of N.Y. Theatres, representing Broadway producers and theatre owners, issued a statement branding the story "a mass of half-truths bent and twisted to suit the newspaper's thesis." The League board also named a committee, headed by producer Alfred de Liagre Jr., to confer with the Times management yesterday (Tues.) about what the showmen group regards as the sheet's consistent and growing hostility to Broadway.

Although the League's statement seemed distorted in several respects and its conclusion that the "legitimate theatre when viewed in its entirety is a completely solvent and flourishing business" appears unwarranted, or at least sub-

Sked 'Thermopylae' For London, Then Broadway

A London production of "The Man From Thermopylae," by Ada Kay, is planned for next winter. It's to be produced under the auspices of Barnett Owen and Kenneth Wagg, by arrangement with Jerry Devine and Charles Hollerith Jr. Owen, Wagg and Hollerith were partnered in the British production of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes," now touring England after a year's run at the Adelphi Theatre, London.

Terence Stamp is to star in the presentation which Peter Coe will direct. Sean Kenny will design the scenery. Rehearsals are scheduled for next January. The play is earmarked for Broadway production the following season.

Short-Run 'Lion' Will Repay 24%

Shelagh Delaney's "The Lion in Love," which folded April 28 after six performances at the One Sheridan Square Theatre, N. Y., is repaying its backers 24% of their $14,025 investment. That's revealed by Gerald Krone, who co-produced the drama with Dorothy Olim and Irvin Dorfman.

According to Krone, the presentation involved an outlay of $13,598, of which $2,939 was earned back at the boxoffice on a total of 15 performances, including previews. That left a deficit of $10,659. Despite its rapid fold, the production has the right for the next six months to produce or lease the play in the U.S. or Canada. A percentage of the show's theme song, which is to be published by E. B. Marks, is also owned by the production.

The potential weekly capacity gross on the presentation at One Sheridan Square was about $5,300. At that figure, the production could have earned an operating profit of around $2,900. General partners in the venture included the three producers and the play's director, Ann Giudici.

DIMENSIONS GIVEN ON NEW MET OPERA

Details of the construction and decor of the Metropolitan Opera House to rise at Lincoln Center have been revealed in New York. Building now is budgetted at $42,700,000, considerably higher than earlier estimates. Wallace K. Harrison has the architectural plum.

Capacity will be 3,765, including 164 standees, 28 score-desk seats for music students. Existing structure seats 3,625.

Happy innovations: 20 rehearsal rooms, three areas large enough to duplicate action on the main stage. Two ballet studios are provided, a chorus hall. Technical shops of unparallelled efficiency are planned—tailoring, millinery, properties, wigs, photography, etc.

Space for 732 cars to park for a fee will be under the Lincoln Center Plaza.

Paul Barry to Relight Playhouse at Cape May

Cape May, N.J., May 28.

The Cape May Playhouse, which has been operated by various managements over a 24-year period but was dark last season, has been taken over by Paul Barry, founder and former producer-director of the Keweenaw Playhouse, Calumet, Mich. A 10-week season of nine shows is planned, to include seven straight plays and two musicals, starting June 28.

Barry, who has an office in New York, is currently engaging a staff and resident company of Equity actors.

Timely Citation

Lending timely emphasis to the idea of Times anti-Broadwayitis was the announcement Monday (26) that the League of off-Broadway Theatres has named Howard Taubman, the Times drama critic, to receive its first annual award for his outstanding contribution to the theatre. The presentation will be made June 13 at a luncheon at Sardi's restaurant, N.Y.

The vote for Taubman, it was stated, was unanimous. As a disgusted denizen of Shubert Alley remarked, "He has more than earned it."

New Non-Profit Group Acquires Holyoke, Mass.; Tied to Williamstown

A new strawhat has been established in Holyoke, Mass., in the same house where the Valley Players operated for 21 years. The theatre, tagged the Casino-in-the-Park Playhouse, is a project of the newly-formed, Pioneer Valley Theatre Foundation Inc., a non-profit cultural organization.

The theatre will be managed by Nikos Psacharopoulos, who's also executive director of the Williamstown (Mass.) Summer Theatre, and Robert Mathews, general manager of the Williamstown showcase the last several years. John T. Calhoun, assistant to Mathews at Williamstown last year, will be business manager there for the upcoming July 5-Aug. 31 season at the Adams Memorial Theatre.

Psacharopoulos, also professor of directing at the Yale School of Drama, is currently vacationing in Europe, prior to the start of the Williamstown season. He'll concentrate on the Adams Memorial this summer, and Mathews will give prior attention to the Casino-in-the-Park.

Tom Brennan will return for his sixth semester as associate director at Williamstown. He's received a grant from Oberlin College to study permanent theatre companies in Europe and Israel next semester. His findings are to be used by the Williamstown Theatre to determine the feasibility of organizing a permanent repertory company.

The Williamstown operation, which is going into its ninth consecutive season, will have two set designers this summer, Bob Darling and John Conklin. Darling will handle the early part of the season and Conklin will do the last few shows. The technical staff will also include William Miniter.

Pajama Tops

Stan Seiden & Zev Bufman presentation of comedy in two acts (three scenes), by Mawby Green and Ed Feilbert, based on a French farce, "Moumou," by Jean De La Traz. Staged by Richard Vath; costumes, Vilma Auld; scenery and lighting, Leo B. Meyer. Stars June Wilkinson, Richard Vath; features Cliff Halle, Don McArt, Leslie Vallen, James Winslow, Frances Fong. Opening May 31, '63 (after two weeks of previews), at the Winter Garden, N.Y.).

George Chauvinet ..... Richard Vath
Leonard Jolijoli ..... Cliff Halle
Babette Latouche ..... June Wilkinson
Jacques ..... James Winslow

In a mimeograph notice sent to the papers last week, Stan Seiden and Zev Bufman revealed that they are not "inviting" the New York critics to review their production of "Pajama Tops," which has been playing a series of previews before its announced opening next Friday night (31) at the Winter Garden.

Under New York State law, anyone with a purchased ticket may not be barred from a public performance in a theatre, so VARIETY bought a pair at the boxoffice and covered the late-evening show last Saturday night (25). The dailies will presumably follow a similar course in reviewing the official preem. The schedule calls for performances Sunday nights, two each Friday and Saturday nights, with no shows Monday nights and no matinees.

It seems fair enough to cover the production before the nominal opening, since there's been ample time for shakedown during the several years of engagements on the Coast and the extended tour, plus the previews before paying audiences. There was a sellout house at the performance caught, apparently comprising mostly theatrical unsophisticates, if not outright initiates.

On the basis of the show itself, there's no reason to question the management's frank statement that 93% of the critics panned the show during its long cut-price tour. What staggers the mind, or at least warrants raised eyebrows, is the assertion that 5% of the reviewers "damned it with faint praise," and 2% could have implied that "it proves basic slapstick results in howls of laughter." Somebody must be kidding.

The biggest reaction, in fact the only big reaction, of the show caught was at that ancient stage chestnut, the contrived breakup. There were two in the show, and the first convulsed the assembled primitives, although it was transparently faked, including a glaring tip-off in the succession of lines that continued the breakup and prolonged the laughter. The second breakup had only mild response.

"Pajama Tops" is a preposterous antic which Seiden and Bufman hope will attract a guilelessly bargain-conscious public in New York. It is not intended for regular legit audiences, even habitual twofer patrons, but is being promoted with a saturation distribution of twofer coupons, plus a teaser ad campaign and the modest rep of its femme star, June Wilkinson, as a sexy looker with a spectacular figger.

The play, a deliberately corny treatment by Mawby Green and Ed Feilbert of what must be a silly French sex farce, "Moumou," by Jean De La Traz, is a pretense of a risque romp in the traditional Gallic manner. There are endless references to sinful matters and, except for perhaps a half-dozen mildly vulgar bits, there's about as much real naughtiness as in a kindergarden entertainment. There is not a vestige of real humor, and for anyone but a theatrical bumpkin, it's approximately a two-hour yawn.

The presentation is worthy of the script. The single set, representing the living room of a villa at Deauville, suggests a museum corridor decorated for a party. Perhaps it was actually designed for this production rather than retrieved from a warehouse. The women's costumes stress blatant sexiness, in at least one instance with notably bad taste.

The acting is generally a sort of enthusiastic version of vintage stock, with Miss Wilkinson visually notable for a while. Richard Vath, doubling as director, portrays a smirking would-be philanderer and Cliff Halle mugs without restraint as a swish who becomes satyr after a night of normal sex.

The management obviously hopes to avoid critical exposure and cash in on the twofer deluge before word-of-mouth comment overtakes the shoddy enterprise. Even with such a palpably grubby production hookup, it seems a questionable project. Isn't there a local ordinance against littering?

Hobe.

Cast Star Series For Parsons College Fest

Among the stars and productions scheduled for the Festival '63 at Parsons College, Fairfield, Ia., this summer are Virginia Mayo and her husband, Michael O'Shea, in "Life With Father," July 2-6; MacDonald Carey in "The Music Man," Aug. 13-17, and Bill Hayes in "Green Grow the Lilacs," Sept. 3-7.

Herbert Propper is stage manager for the summer series of legit productions.

Off-Broadway Reviews

Night of the Auk

Iris Forrest & Charles Meier revival of drama in two acts (six scenes), by Arch Oboler. Staged by Charles Meier; lighting, Chuck Hover. Opened May 21, '63, at the Cricket Theatre, N.Y.; $3.20 top.
Cast: Frank Farmer, Stan Moore, Simm Landres, Joseph Warren, Eugene R. Wood.

Arch Oboler has reputedly done considerable rewriting of "Night of the Auk" since it flopped on Broadway in 1956. But his play about the first trip to the moon is still pretentious and melodramatic, an unlikely bet for off-Broadway success.

The producers of the revival perhaps figured that today's real-life space flights would add interest to the Oboler work. But the drama of true triumphs like that of Gordon Cooper only serves to underline the absurdity of "Night of the Auk."

The idea of a journey to the moon is no longer fantastic, but it is hard to believe that the government would permit a psychotic civilian to command the spaceship or allow a homosexual and a couple of neurotics to join the crew. And the contrived plot, which includes a murder or two as well as a nuclear holocaust on earth, is just too much to accept. Moreover, the dialog is painful to hear—a florid mixture of forced alliterations, inverted constructions, and hackneyed imagery.

Adding to the discomfort is Stan Moore's poor performance in the role created on Broadway by Christopher Plummer. Eugene R. Wood is unable to make the Claude Raines part ring true, but Joseph Warren performs creditably as a general, portrayed originally by Wendell Corey. Simm Landres and Frank Farmer do what they can in the two supporting roles.

Room Service

Equity Library Theatre, Inc. revival of a comedy in three acts (four scenes), by John Murray and Allen Boretz. Staged by Robert H. Livingston; sets, Donald Bailey Tirrell; lighting, A. Raymond Rutan; clothes, Joan L. Vollbrecht; production manager, Lee H. Kalcheim; asst. director, Peter Gardiner. Opened May 10, '63, at the Master Theatre, N.Y.
Cast: Elliot Levine, William Macy, George Axler, David Dunham, Ted Chapman, Beth Brickell, Wayne Maxwell, Sally Kirkland, Peter Johl, Edwin Young, Ron Nardoianni, Neal Thorpe, Joey Fitter, Rick Taylor, John David Kees.

There are still plenty of laughs in "Room Service." Although the ELT revival of the John Murray-Allen Boretz farce is a little uneven, it has been swiftly paced by director Robert H. Livingston, and makes cheerful entertainment.

Topping the cast are Wayne Maxwell, ingratiatingly naive as a playwright from the sticks, and Ted Chapman, Peter Johl, and Joey Fitter, amusing in smaller roles. As theatrical deadbeats trying to outwit the management of a Broadway hotel, William Macy, David Dunham and Beth Brickell are okay, and George Axler, Elliot Levine, Sally Kirkland and Edwin Young contribute acceptable performances in support.

Donald Bailey Tirrel's hotel room set is just right, a nice harkback to Hollywood modern of the 1930's. "Room Service" makes an effective finale for ELT's 1962-63 season.

A Shot in the Dark

London, May 17.

Williamson Music Ltd. (in association with Leland Hayward Enterprises Ltd.) presentation of a three-act comedy by Harry Kurnitz, adapted from Marcel Achard's "L'Idiote." Staged by Harold Clurman; production supervision, Jerome Whyte; decor and lighting, Ben Edwards. Stars Judi Dench; features George Baker, Patricia Marmont, Peter Sallis, Anthony Newlands, Kenneth Edwards, Polly Adams, Edward Phillips. Opened May 16, '63, at the Lyric Theatre; $3.50 top.

Paul Sevigne ..... George Baker
Morestan ..... Peter Sallis
Lablache ..... Kenneth Edwards
Antoinette Sevigne ..... Polly Adams
Josefa Lantenay ..... Judi Dench
Guard ..... Edward Phillips
Dominque Beaurevers ..... Patricia Marmont
Benjamin Beaurevers ..... Anthony Newlands

Despite its success in New York and Paris "A Shot in the Dark" seems a doubtful longrunner in the West End. It's remarkable how a determinedly all British cast can usually hammer most of the gaiety and charm out of the average French comedy. Harry Kurnitz's adaptation of Marcel Achard's farce, "L'Idote," has largely forfeited wit for facetiousness and innuendo and the slim pretext of the storyline becomes strained long before the evening is over.

Harold Clurman's direction, supervised by Jerome Whyte, keeps the long, wordy passages of cross-examination as brisk as possible, but there is still much repetitious tedium. Some of the wisecracks are certain laughs, but the dialog is generally too concerned with the quick snigger and wisecrack rather than with reasonable character drawing.

The comedy involves the question of whether a pretty, empty-headed, amoral parlormaid shot and killed the Spanish chauffeur of a wealthy Paris banking family. The role of the young suspect provides a showcase for Judi Dench, an Old Vic actress playing her first modern-dress role. She brings vivacity that is intermittently disarming and cloying.

George Baker, most English of actors, shrewdly makes no attempt to simulate a Parisian mood as the young magistrate, and Peter Sallis gives a richly wry performance as his clerk. Anthony Newlands is effectively urbane as the banker trapped into admitting that he was also the parlormaid's lover.

Kenneth Edwards, Patricia Marmont, Polly Adams and Edward Phillips ably round off a cast that gives "A Shot in the Dark" fleeting comic impact. Ben Edwards' solo office setting is soberly unobtrusive.

Day of the Prince

London, May 15.

English Stage Co. presentation of a three-act comedy by Frank Hilton. Staged by Keith Johnstone; decor, Sally Jacobs. Features Angela Baddeley, Christopher Sandford, Jean Conroy, Arnold Jarrow, Bernard Bresslaw, Pauline Boty, Bari Jonson, John East. Opened May 14, '63, at the Royal Court Theatre, London; $2.95 top.

Mum ..... Angela Baddeley
Cyril ..... Christopher Sandford
Louise ..... Jean Conroy
Dad ..... Arnold Jarrow
Bert ..... Bernard Bresslaw
Virginia ..... Pauline Boty
Prince ..... Bari Jonson
Policeman ..... John East

The latest entry to the world of the so-called Theatre Eccentric is "Day of the Prince," a first play by Frank Hilton, a self-admittedly unsuccessful novelist. It's questionable if he'll do much better as a playwright.

The author describes "Day of the Prince" as a farce, but the play is not skillfully enough constructed to stand up in this branch of legit writing. Actually, it is not so much a farce as an uneasy mixture of broad, low comedy, satirical comedy and caricature, with socially significant, seemingly anarchistic message struggling not to founder among the non-sequiters and fantasy.

Though there are many laughs and several engaging situations and ideas, there are too many flat moments and the author has a struggle to keep afloat for three acts. There may be a wider audience for "Day of the Prince" than at the Royal Court, but a transfer would be a considerable gamble unless the show is tightened.

Story concerns a lower middle-class suburban family, including a nagging, bossy possessive mother, a meek father, an oafish son, his priggish younger brother, an arid do-gooder, daughter, her virginal, sex-conscious, romantic younger sister and another son who left home in rebellion and is carefully not mentioned.

When a suitor for the young daughter turns up there is consternation that he is a young Jamaican with more intelligence, education and poise than the entire family. They finally reject him in a sharply etched scene containing stinging references to racial discrimination, but nothing else lives up to its effectiveness.

Keith Johnstone's staging is brisk and inventive, but cannot hide the script's flaws. The ending, which disintegrates into slapstick, owes more to the special effects ingenuity of the stage manager than to the director or author. With one glaring exception the acting is good, with most of the cast striking the right farcical note by playing as if their eccentric behavior is normal and not intended to be funny.

Angela Baddeley is an effective little spitfire as the domineering, self-deluding mother, and Bernard Bresslaw and Christopher Sandford are good as the sons, and Jean Conroy is standout as the older daughter.

Arnold Yarrow is excellent as the father and Bari Jonson is plausibly suave as the Jamaican, but Pauline Boty, making her professional debut as the younger daughter, betrays her inexperience with a posturing, overly-mannered performance.

Sally Miles' decor is adequately drab.

Shubert Alley Shorts

Susan Oliver, who was recently in New York on a television assignment, may return east to tour the strawhat circuit this summer in a production of "A Shot in the Dark". . . David Black, who plans a Broadway production this fall of the British play, "Semi-Detached," intends to import the "original" cast that did it first at the Belgrade Theatre, Coventry, rather than the revised troupe, including Laurence Olivier, that did it later in London. Critics who saw both versions of the David Turner comedy generally preferred the Coventry company.

Broadway pressagent Bernard Simon amends a recent Inside Stuff Legit item about Columbia Univ. graduates among the New York drama critics. He recalls that Richard Watts Jr., of the N.Y. Post, was not only manager of the college fencing team, but was serving as theatre reviewer for the undergraduate daily, The Spectator . . . David Larson, a teacher in the speech and drama department of the Univ. of Houston, is the author of "Fiesta Brava," a drama about the conflict of traditional and modern influences in Spain, where he lived for several years. The play produced recently at the State Univ. of Iowa, as a requirement for a doctorate degree.

"Nobody Loves Me," recently tried out at the Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., is slated for Broadway production next fall, but not by Michael Ellis, operator of the strawhat. The Broadway presentation is planned by Saint Subber, who holds the option on the Neil Simon comedy . . . Dick and Helen Andrews, leading members of the Bergen (County, N.J.) Players, have bought a piece of land at East Durham, N.Y., and will build a house for weekends and vacations.

A booklet containing a transcript of the memorial service for Lawrence Langner, held last Jan. 10 at the ANTA Theatre, N.Y., has been issued by the late producer-author-patent attorney's widow, Armina Marshall Langner, and his son and daughter-in-law, Philip and Marilyn Langner. It includes the tributes of all the speakers, the texts of the principal messages read at the service, and the eulogy delivered by playwright S. N. Behrman at the funeral Dec. 30. Langner, the founder and co-director of the Theatre Guild, the founder of the American Shakespeare Festival at Stratford, Conn., and founder and for many years operator of the Westport (Conn.) Country Playhouse, plus numerous other activities, died Dec. 26 at the age of 72. Mrs. Langner and Philip now head the Guild.

Nathan Cohen, entertainment editor of the Toronto Star, is in Vancouver this week to cover the opening presentations at the Vancouver International Festival . . . A volume of plays by Lady Gregory, with a forward by Sean O'Casey, has been published by Hill & Wang; $5 . . . Jo Mielziner leaves next Friday (31) for a two-week trip to Paris and London, in connection with technical stage equipment for the two theatres at Lincoln Center, N.Y., which he is designing in collaboration with Eero Saarinan Associates. His only two scenic assignment so far for next fall are the Lincoln Repertory productions of the new Arthur Miller and S. N. Behrman plays.

Cy Feuer and Ernest H. Martin, who have kept the advertising budget at a minimum for their Broadway production of "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying," on the theory that since it was doing capacity business there was no point in spending money to stimulate the sale of unavailable tickets, have puzzled managerial circles by following a similar policy on their presentation of "Little Me." The latter musical hasn't been a sellout, and recently tapered off so much they've put it on twofers. However, the producers have'nt increased the ad budget, although they have a presumed boxoffice draw in the star, Sid Caesar.

The Institute for Advanced Studies in the Theatre Arts is moving from its New York headquarters to Denver for the summer. John D. Mitchell is president of the organization, with Mirian P. (Mrs.) M chell vice-prez and secretary . . . Tom Jones, author and lyricist of the off-Broadway "Fantasticks" and lyricist of the scheduled Broadway musical, "A Hundred and Ten in the Shade," will be married next Saturday (1) in Livermore Falls, Me., to Elinor Wright, associate producer in the Allen-Hodgdon office in New York.

The American Shakespeare Festival, at Stratford, Conn., has opened a boxoffice in the lobby of the Astor Hotel, N.Y. . . . Helen Hayes will auction most of the things in her Nyack (N.Y.) home, in September, with a greater part of the proceeds going to the Mary MacArthur Scholarship Fund of the American Academy of Dramatic Art. The actress has sold the property and will reside in New York, starting in the fall . . . Samuel French has published a hardcover edition of the acting version of "Seidman and Son," Elick Moll's dramatization of his own novel; at $3.

B'way Spotty; 'Oliver' Back to SRO, Mostel Sock $58,879, Caesar 39½G, 'Fringe' 31½G, 'World' 35G, 'Tops' 17G

Broadway had minor-to-major fluctuations last week. The outlook for this frame is favorable, provided there is a boxoffice pickup over the long holiday weekend. Among the shows registering increases last week was "Oliver," the climb putting it back in the sellout groove with "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" and "Never Too Late."

Getting in just under the wire as the last entry of the season will be "Pajama Tops," opening next Friday night (31) at the Winter Garden Theatre. The presentation, which is geared for two-for-one trade, registered an okay take on preview performances last week. Business for the current session is shaping even better and the window sale has been running at around $5,000 daily.

Incidentally, the "Pajama" management has asked the critics not to cover the offering on the premise that it's a show for audiences, not for reviewers. Also opening this week is a revival of "Pal Joey," starting a two-week stand tonight (Wed.) at the City Center. It follows "Oklahoma," which ended its fortnight engagement at the municipal showcase last Sunday (26).

"Hot Spot" collapsed Saturday (25) and another unsuccessful entry, "Too True to Be Good," calls it quits next Saturday (1). That date will also mark the closing after an enormously profitable run of "A Man for All Seasons" which is scheduled to begin touring July 22 at the Greek Theatre, Los Angeles.

"Mr. President," which is figured to have just about run through its hefty theatre party advance, has posted a closing notice for June 8 and "Sound of Music" is advertising "last weeks." Business was off last week for the two musicals.

Substantial gains were registered by such tuners as "A Funny Thing Happened on the Way to the Forum," "Little Me" (with twofers a likely factor) and "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off." The solid-grossing "Beyond the Fringe" picked up and improvement was also registered by "No Strings," which exits Aug. 3 for the road.

"She Loves Me" dropped again last week, as did "Tovarich." Contributing to a beef-up for "Rattle of a Simple Man" was the patronage at two performances of Play of the Month Guild members. The show is to get scattered POMG attendance through mid-June.

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta), Rep. (Repertory), DR (Dramatic Reading).

Legit Followup

Desire Under The Elms
(CIRCLE IN THE SQUARE, N.Y.)

George C. Scott, Colleen Dewhurst and Rip Torn have left the cast, but in at least one important aspect, this edition of Jose Quintero's revival of "Desire Under The Elms" may be better than the original which opened last January. With Frank Schofield as Ephraim Cabot, the Eugene O'Neil drama is now dominated by the towering, wrathful figure of that 76-year-old New Hampshire farmer—an Old Testament prophet twisted and tormented by the stones and Puritanism of New England. It's a fine performance, theatrical and sometimes shatteringly compassionate, illuminating and providing force for the O'Neill drama.

As the old man's new wife, Salome Jens has replaced Miss Dewhurst. Despite her softly pretty looks (with suggestions of Dorothy Maguire of the "Claudia" days), Miss Jens is a good enough actress to register much of the cold strength which first drives the character to adultery-of-convenience and leads eventually to infanticide and tragedy. As the stepson-lover, Alan Mixon is equally good—somewhat mannered but furiously powerful when the script demands.

The overall production retains its vast energy and pace, which, with these three principals, adds up to a satisfying and thoroughly professional off-Broadway offering.

Road: 'Take Her' $33,215 (7), Denver; 'Sound' 60G, Philly; 'Milk' 56G, Cleve.; 'Mary' $32,113, M'kee; 'Dad' 30½G, L.A.

Business was good for most road shows last week. Continuing in the big money were "How to Succeed in Business Without Really Trying" in Detroit, "Camelot" in Los Angeles, "Sound of Music" in Philadelphia and "Carousel" in San Francisco.

The take for "Milk and Honey" in Cleveland was double the previous week's gross for the musical in Cincinnati. "Stop the World—I Want to Get Off" did well in Minneapolis, as did "Take Her, She's Mine" in Denver and "Oh Dad, Poor Dad, Mama's Hung You in the Closet and I'm Feelin' So Sad" in Los Angeles.

The "Mary, Mary" company in Milwaukee played to strong business, while the unit in Chicago did okay. The bus-and-truck edition of the comedy got off to a slow start, though, in the first week of a scheduled summer stand in Philadelphia. "Shot in the Dark" ended its tour Saturday (25) in Chicago.

Estimates for Last Week

Parenthetic designations for out-of-town shows are the same as for Broadway, except that hyphenated T with show classification indicates tryout, RS indicates road show and BT indicates bus-and-truck production. Also, prices on touring shows include 10% Federal tax and local tax, if any, but as or Broadway grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes. Engagements are for single week unless otherwise noted.

Where subscription is mentioned, the gross is the net after the deductions of commissions. Grosses for split weeks are projected when shows play guaranteed dates.

Literati

Gets $50,000 Libel Verdict

Wade Church, former Attorney General for the state of Arizona and unsuccessful candidate for re-election in the 1960 election was awarded $50,000 judgment in Maricopa County Superior court as a result of a libel suit filed by Church. This is the largest amount ever granted in a suit concerning personnel integrity in this state.

Defendants were: Phoenix Newspapers Inc., Eugene Pulliam, publisher of the Indianapolis Star and the local Phoenix Gazette and Arizona Republic. Named co-defendant was Michael Padev, Pulliam's brother-in-law and foreign editor for the Republic.

The action stemmed from remarks made by Padev in an editorial article headed "Communism and Mr. Church" criticizing a campaign speech delivered by Church before the AFL-CIO in convention at Flagstaff, Ariz. March 11, 1959. In his address Church advocated the creation of a "peoples council" to counterbalance the lopsided influence held by lobbyists over the states legislatures.

Church sued for $500,000 but the 9-3 jury verdict fixed compensatory damages at $30,000 and punitive damages at $20,000.

A Pro Gets The Job

Royd E. Beamish, 53, vet newspaperman and tv-radio panelist, is first professional director of the Canadian Dept. of Trade and Commerce's expanding trade publicity branch. Previous directors were trade commissioners home between assignments abroad.

Beamish, ex-Toronto Globe & Mail and one-time associate editor of Financial Post, was aide to the president of Maclean-Hunter Ltd., supervising 46 trade mags and four bureaus in Montreal, Ottawa, Winnipeg and Vancouver before taking over the new post. He has also lectured in journalism at U. of Toronto and U. of Waterloo, and is trilingual.

Mitchell Sharp, one-time T&C deputy minister, is now minister under the recently elected Liberal government. James A. Roberts remains deputy minister (executive head).

Called 'Harassment'

David King, Cincinnati news dealer under indictment on a charge of possessing obscene literature, was denied a demurrer plea May 16 by Judge Carson Hoy in upholding constitutionality of Ohio's anti-smut law.

King was arrested Oct. 10, 1961 by city detectives who confiscated 200 books and magazines in his downtown shop. Three of the books serve as the basis for the indictment.

The arrest constituted "police harassment," King's attorney argued.

English Maul Their Lingo

Eric Linklater, leading Scot author, told a writers' confab at Stirling, Scotland, that, if it had not been for the Scots and the Irish, the English language would have vanished long ago.

The English language he claimed, was being "shockingly maltreated" by English writers. They had no idea of how to use it, he said.

According to Linklater, the writer's responsibility is to maintain the traditional values of European civilization.

Members of the panel—Linklater, Sir Compton Mackenzie and Alastair M. Dunnett, Editor of "The Scotsman"—replying to a question about pornographic literature, contended it was merely a passing phase.

The four-letter words, said Sir Compton, were much stronger in print than the spoken word, and he could never understand an author using such words when he was not prepared to voice them in public.

Theatre League-Times Huddle

ject to definition and interpretation, it was hardly less realistic than the Times story.

The League, which fears the increasing drying-up of investment capital, attacked the Times figures as presenting "a partial and incomplete picture, since even a cursory glance indicates to the astute reader that many of the Theatre's most important sources of profit have been ignored."

While the chart of specific productions in the Times report carried a notation in italics that the figures represented only the returns from the actual Broadway runs, excluding income from film sales and other subsidiary rights, that factor was, in effect, ignored in the overall estimate of losses. Moreover, there were several outright errors in the piece and to anyone familiar with legit economics, the whole approach tended to reveal the naivete of feature journalism.

For example, the list of pre-Broadway casualties included not only "Have I Got a Girl for You" and "Banderol," out-of-town closings that are still active projects scheduled for Broadway presentation next fall, but also "Dead Pigeon," a Coast revival of flop put on by Harald Bromley in 1953-54, with Lloyd Bridges as star, for an estimated $45,000 loss.

The Times story also failed to specify whether the profits it listed on the already-established hits represented the net or also included the total operating return before repayment of investment. In addition, there was no indication whether the listed profit was total or only the backers' share—for investment purposes, the latter amount is the significant one.

But more important than last Friday's discouraging story and its sensationalized manner of presentation, at least to most Broadway producers, managers and pressagents, is what they see as the prevailing anti-Broadway attitude of the Times. Since the paper is unquestionably the most influential theatrically, not only in New York but also throughout the U.S. and even internationally, the League membership is seriously concerned about the situation.

Not Impressed

Representatives of the Times tend to minimize and shrug off the resentment of Broadway managements. Members of the drama staff were obviously proud of that particular story, regarding it as a comprehensive, illuminating, factual presentation of the sort that would be devoted to any other business or public activity. In general, they are inclined to dismiss reports or expressions of managerial dissatisfaction as special pleading.

The paper's staffers point out that the Times has been devoting greatly increased space to show business since the advent of Joseph Hertzberg as cultural editor. Last Friday, for example, there were 11½ columns, including Esterow's piece, about legit, pictures, cabaret, music and ballet. Yesterday's (Tues.) issue carried approximately 50 inches of legit news and reviews, including a piece about increasing commercialization of Stratford-on-Avon, England.

Broadway producers and managers, however, think the Times has a discriminatory attitude and even policy, against Broadway and in favor of off-Broadway, out-of-town theatre and arty, esoteric drama. For instance, it's argued, the Times ad rate for off-Broadway is half of that for Broadway, although the copy frequently, if not usually, runs in adjoining columns.

Off-Broadway news is given equal and sometimes greater prominence and emphasis than Broadway news, and there is no differentiation in presentation between Broadway and off-Broadway reviews. Moreover, the standard of criticism is notably more severe for Broadway than off-Broadway, it's claimed.

The resentment in Broadway circles over Esterow's piece of last Friday was not only bitter, but almost unanimous. The reaction was intensified, too, by advance knowledge of the scathing column by Howard Taubman, Times drama critic, in last Sunday's (26) entertainment section. The piece was seen as simply a more vehement expression of Taubman's consistently anti-Broadway attitude. Coupled with the Esterow story, it enfuriated even normally placid producers, and brought the League's irate statement.

Traced To Stevens

The feeling of several League board members is that the Esterow piece resulted from a recent speech by Roger L. Stevens at a drama symposium at Boston College. The producer-realtor was reported, notably in the Times, as having declared that Broadway season, the worst in history, will represent a loss of between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000.

Other League officials suspect that, at least subconsciously, the Times editors were giving vent in the Esterow yarn to their rancor at David Merrick, who has for many months carried on a campaign of public ridicule, primarily of Taubman, but inevitably also affecting the Times prestige. It was observed that the Times story went out of the way to deplore what it called the overselling of Broadway shows.

That was taken as a special dig at Merrick, whose promotional savvy and daring has been a factor in the success of several of his shows. The crack was particularly galling to producers, one of whom remarked, "Look who's talking about overselling—the sheet that says it carries 'All the News That's Fit to Print'."

60 performances during the festival, through June 22. All except "Spring Thaw" and "Earnest" go in the 2,800-seat Queen Elizabeth Theatre, the two exceptions going in the adjoining 600-seat Playhouse.

The Festival is budgeted at $190,000 plus, with funds raised by a combination of contributions from private citizens and grants from civic, provincial and federal governments. The Festival society has also raised the money to pay its outstanding deficit of $64,000 from past years. With a realistic 60% attendance estimated, business manager Gordon Hilker and festival president T. N. Beaupre see this as the first year the fest will break even.

"THE BEAST IN ME"

DON ELLIOTT
41 Central Park West
New York 23, New York

May 29, 1963

Dear First Nighters:

To a composer who also happens to be a Thurber fan, writing the music for "Thurber Carnival" was a chance-of-a-lifetime. Getting a second chance with "The Beast In Me" was almost too good to be true.

The show may have closed, but the weeks of diligent effort that went into it were rewarded with your kind notices, for which I'd like to say "thanks."

But the success of my score also owes a debt of gratitude to those who aided me in presenting it in its finished form: lyricist James Costigan; arranger Bill Byers; conductor Lehman Engel; the entire orchestra; the producers and the cast of "The Beast In Me," whose original approach to the Thurber fables were a constant source of inspiration.

Sincerely,

Don Elliott

"Don Elliott's music is as simple, yet as sophisticated as Thurber's muse."
Howard Taubman, NEW YORK TIMES

"Mr. Elliott's score is a constant delight. Buy the cast album and listen to Mr. Elliott's music."
Jack Gaver, UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

"A musical score by Don Elliott neatly carries through with humorously offbeat whirls and bursts of jazz rhythm."
William Glover, ASSOCIATED PRESS

"The show's virtues are a Don Elliott score that is punctuated by . . . singable tunes and . . . swinging jazz passages . . . that catch the rhythm and sound of Thurber."
Len Harris, NEW YORK WORLD TELEGRAM & SUN

"The lowest bows go to Don Elliott, who composed a remarkably engaging score. That album should be a hit . . ."
Edward S. Hipp, NEWARK EVENING NEWS

"Thurber fables fare best . . . when fleshed by the superb score of jazz virtuose Don Elliott . . ."
John D. Mitchell, JOURNAL AMERICAN

"Don Elliott composed the engaging music and appears among its featured cast . . . (the) music glorifies jazz into a haunting quality especially when soloed by Don Elliott . . ."
Ethel Colby, JOURNAL OF COMMERCE

"Don Elliott has composed a pleasantly jazzy musical accompaniment for this one, and supplied a hip orchestra to play it."
Robert Coleman, NEW YORK MIRROR

"Mr. Costigan has . . . a confidential manner that imparts the darker secrets of the nursery as easily and as slyly as Don Elliott's tunes do."
Walter Kerr, HERALD TRIBUNE

"Pleasant lyrics . . . go with Don Elliott's attractive score."
Richard Watts, Jr., NEW YORK POST

"Don Elliott has written appropriate and amusing music . . . and also takes part in the performance . . . getting strange sounds out of a mellophone, which is something like a french horn only quicker."

Celebs

is disclosure that the festival is being expanded from one week to 10 days, August 2-11, again at Loew's Theatre, "to permit more time between screenings and an even more representative selection of the best in contemporary world cinema."

Festival, which was kicked off in 1960 as part of the Montreal Festivals, an extensive program of music and drama which takes place annually for entire month of August, has obviously reached the point where even the non-arty, non-egghead set look to it as presiding — and as having already given — the entire Canadian film industry, exhibs, distribs, players and producers, a badly-needed stimulus by making the entire community film conscious.

Fact alone that United Amusements chain, is ready and willing to give up its flagship house, Loew's on St. Catherine street, is interpreted in the most optimistic of terms.

Loew's, being in the heart of the tourist and business district, usually plays top first-run product. When festival was launched in 1960, Consolidated Theatres — at that time owners of Loew's — looked skeptically at proposition of festival sponsors who wanted to take over the house for one week during the heart of the tourist season.

Feeling on the part of the business heads in the film industry, was that festival would flop, because who's interested here in going to see these offbeat, foreign flicks, except the offbeat, foreign types? At it turned out, however, Festival was a smash almost from the start, playing SRO for the full week, and it's been gathering steam ever since.

Considerable credit for this is being given top-level National Film Board personnel, who took an interest in the fest, helped get it organized, and used their foreign contracts to line up top pictures from abroad. Much support also came from Cinema Clubs, which have enjoyed remarkable growth here in recent years — again with the help and encouragement of the NFB people.

Not to be ignored is the bilingual nature of Montreal, with almost 80% of citizens using French as their mother tongue; second because of the influx of "new Canadians" from Europe, many of them of an intellectual or quasi-intellectual element anxious to support the arts, whatever the form.

cess that the Bob Shaw choral achieved when it visited Russia, and that a similar trip to South America by "this great organization was almost ended because of a few Washington people who can't appreciate what so few dollars spent can bring in return. I think that such overseas trips and what they are accomplishing are marvelous."

Parker also spoke for a Dept. of Culture on a national level as perhaps one of the methods whereby youth in this country could get a fairer realization of their talents. "To often today, a youngster is exploited and then dropped," he said.

show with Charles his third. Former had the overflow buff and show-crowd with him all the way as he danced, sang and did imitations. Even his quips, serious asides and gags were savored. His consummate dyanmic show talents scored easily. His sidekick Frank Sinatra hit last year with two benefit shows.

Charles again got them with his jazz, blues, r'n'r singing and playing plus a young singer Jean Kent and his Raylets and musicians; It showed there was a definite place here for Yank names but the only drawback is still the money problem in re U.S. stars. However, growing affluence and youthful spending money, plus growing disk takes for offshore names, could possibly smooth this out in the near future to have more topliner U.S. entertainers on the Paris scene.

One world effect is pointed to with the successes of Yves Montand and Maurice Chevalier in the U.S. and the recent fine one night stand of Charles Aznavour.
